MASSACRE VICTIMS in Cambodia float down the Mekong River in what is believed to be the largest mass killing of Vietnamese citizens yet revealed in Cambodia. Government leaders, who recently deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk, have been whipping up a campaign against the 600,000 Vietnamese civilians who live in Cambodia as well as against N. Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in the country. (AP Wirephoto).

IN CAMBODIA

Hundreds Massacred

Viets Tied, Shot

NEAK LEUNG (AP) —The bodies of hundreds of Vietnamese floated down the Meking River in southeast Cambodia today, many with their hands tied behind them. It appeared to be the biggest mass killing yet revealed in Cambodia.

A police official at the Neak Leung ferry crossing 36 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, said he had counted 400 bodies this morning.

But still they come, and more could be seen for a mile up the river, until it disappeared around a bend.

The stench was overpowering, and passengers on the ferry gagged as the boat moved through the bodies.

Some women were among the slain. Most were men clad only in black shorts. One group of eight bodies, including one woman, floated by tied together.

Cambodians along the bank including the police said they had no idea where the bodies came from.

WHIP UP HATE

The government leaders who deposed Prince Nordom Sihanouk have been whipping up an anti-Vietnamese campaign directed not only at the thousands of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops who operate back and forth across the border with South Vietnam but at the 600,000 Vietnamese who live in Cambodia.

The Khmer people of Cambodia and the Annamites of Vietnam have been traditional enemies for centuries, and government planes dropped leaflets in Phnom Penh Saturday reminding the people of a historic massacre when "the Khmers once rose up and killed all Annamites on Cambodian territory in one night."

At least 73 Vietnamese who had been rounded up in the town of Prasaut for security checks were killed there last Friday, and according to available evidence Cambodian troops were the killers.

'CAN'T ACCEPT' ARCTIC STAND

WASHINGTON (CP) — The state department said today the United States "can neither accept nor acquiesce in" the recent Canadian assertion of Arctic and territorial-sea jurisdiction.

In particular, the statement said, "we are concerned that this action by Canada, if not opposed by us, would be taken as precedent in other parts of the world, for other unilateral infringements of the freedom of the seas."

The statement was issued by State Secretary William Rogers.

"For the reasons indicated earlier, the United States cannot accept the unilateral jurisdictional assertion and we have urged the Canadian government to defer making them effective while co-operating in efforts promptly to reach internationally-agreed solutions."

In Ottawa, informed sources were quoted Tuesday as saying Canada would reject, firmly but politely, the U.S. complaint.

Prime Minister Trudeau and U.S. President Nixon had one telephone conversation about three weeks ago concerning Canada's jurisdictional claims.

Today in the Commons, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp denied reports that the United States has threatened economic sanctions against Canada in the diplomatic note.

Sharp said he favors making the note public to dispel these rumors from U.S. sources.

NERVE GAS EXPERTS COMING FROM OTTAWA

By The Canadian Press

OTTAWA — The Canadian government will send nerve gas experts to the West Coast to be on hand for the U.S. shipment of nerve gas through the Juan de Fuca Strait, it was announced today.

Defence Minister Leo Cadieux said the experts would be dispatched as soon as word comes on the date of the shipment.

Earlier, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons that Canada has expressed "grave concern" to the U.S. about the trip.

Crippled Apollo 13 Weaving Off Course

Times News Services

HOUSTON — The crippled Apollo 13 spacecraft, limping back to earth today with its three weary astronauts, was slightly off course and pitching erratically, while Mission Control sought to allay fears that the service module is disintegrating.

James A. Lovell, Fred W. Haise and John L. Swigert were hoarding their vital oxygen, water and power supplies and they have no margins left for error, but space administration officials still believe they will be able to land safely in the Pacific early Friday.

Fears that the service module may now be breaking up began Tuesday night when Haise, on watch while the other two slept, spotted a four-inch square piece of metal floating by the module. He also reported a stream of vapor exhausting from somewhere on the service module.

MAIN ENGINE

This led to speculation at the Manned Spacecraft Centre here that the module, which contains the main engine and other key equipment, is breaking up.

But an agency spokesman said: "Even if it was, it wouldn't matter. It's not important anyway . . . they could jettison the service module now."

However, the Apollo 13, rocked by a mystery explosion Monday night which aborted man's third moon mission, was pitching and yawing when Lovell relieved Haise on watch this morning.

The yawing and pitching was believed responsible for throwing the spacecraft off course, necessitating a mid-course correction tonight or early Thursday.

MISS THE EARTH

If for any reason the firing, which will be done with the lunar landing module engines, is not successful the spaceship will miss the earth by 104 miles and probably go into a remote orbit from which there would be no escape for the three men.

Their meagre supply of oxygen would be exhausted in a matter of a few days, long before they would approach earth again closely enough for a landing attempt.

There is little reason to believe the lunar module's big descent engine will not function properly, however; it has already fired twice, making vital course corrections, since Monday night when an oxygen tank ruptured, cutting electrical power and rendering the command module virtually useless.

Since then the three men have been reduced to almost total dependence on the power attached lunar landing craft.

Flight Director Eugene Kranz said today the lunar module is in excellent shape and "I think it's fully capable of getting the crew back. I feel we are much better off than we were last night as far as consumables and everything is concerned."

The astronauts will ride the command ship through the atmosphere to a planned splashdown near Samoa in the Pacific at 10:04 a.m. PST Friday, some 46 minutes later than earlier estimated by the space agency.

Because of the possibility that tropical storm Helen, now about 500 miles away, might be in the recovery area, Mission Control told the astronauts it might delay a final course correction until Thursday afternoon.

The fragile lunar lander, now manned by Haise and Lovell, will be jettisoned, along with the service module, shortly before the spacecraft re-enters the earth's atmosphere for splashdown.

Haise and Lovell will rejoin Swigert in the command capsule Odyssey shortly before the jettisoning procedure.

Death Still Follows Their Every Movement

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

Between now and splashdown, the Apollo 13 astronauts still must accomplish several crucial tasks, using a disabled command craft and a sort of jury-rigged lander.

These tasks are the bare minimum for safe return.

They must first follow a true and correct trajectory toward the slot in the earth's atmosphere which they must enter Friday for landing. This could mean one or more firings of the lunar module descent engine to adjust the course.

In the past these have always gone well. But now there are special problems.

The main guidance decisions are made on the ground from information fed into computers by tracking antennas. But the guidance system on the spacecraft, fed ground directions, must also work.

At Massachusetts Institute of Technology Tuesday night — at the celebrated instrumentation laboratory — a 30-

B-B Body Backs Third Language

OTTAWA (CP) — The royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism recommends that languages besides English and French be taught in Canadian elementary schools where sufficient demand exists.

The commission says in its fourth report, tabled today in the Commons by Prime Minister Trudeau, that this might mean eliminating some parts of the basic curriculum "and would therefore entail a deliberate choice by parents and school authorities."

It takes as its main premise that "public education systems should provide courses that will assist the various cultural groups in the maintenance of their languages and cultures."

It suggests that languages other than English or French also be used in the schools as the languages of instruction in some cultural subjects.

The commission's report says the definition of what constitutes sufficient demand for the teaching of languages other than English and French should be left to provincial education authorities.

Though education comes under provincial jurisdiction, the commission's report is to the federal government, which appointed it in 1963.

Trudeau said recently that the commission finished its work March 31 but that some of its reports remain to be edited and printed. The fourth report is entitled The Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups.

The report is based on 1961 census figures now nearly a decade out of date. The next census will be taken in 1971.

The commission says more advanced instruction and a wider range of choice in languages other than English and French and related cultural subjects should be provided in public high schools where demand is sufficient.

It says there are at least 60 languages of significant groups in Canada, though the main ones, other than French and English, are German, Italian, Ukrainian and Dutch.

The report emphasizes that the learning of third languages in school should not be carried on at the expense of public support for learning the second official language, French or English.

Talks Resume

VANCOUVER (CP)—Negotiations have resumed between the locked out bricklayers' union and the Construction Labor Relations Association, CLRA president C. G. Connaghan said today.

The bricklayers are one of seven unions locked out by the employers' group as a wage dispute threatens to shut down most of the province's $200,000,000 construction industry. (See Page 53.)

Connaghan said talks are scheduled to resume Thursday with the carpenters and possibly other unions.

It'll be th' most welcome splash-down in history.

Wines Hit Hard In Price Hikes

By BRUCE YEMEN

While one major proposal of the Morrow Liquor Commission was going into effect today, another was going down the drain.

The provincial cabinet approved price increases on 65 items sold by the Liquor Control Board in direct opposition to the royal commission's recommendation for a two-year price freeze on alcoholic beverages.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said the increases and decreases reflect changes in the price paid by the Liquor Board for the products, and there is no change in the mark-up by the board.

"You'll find our mark-up is the lowest in all Canada," he said.

The cabinet order was released about the same time as 19-year-olds were being allowed to drink alcoholic beverages for the first time in B.C. — as was recommended by the commission.

A FEW STARTLING

The price increases generally were in the 10- to 25-cent range but a few were more startling.

Most of the increases hit imported wines, brandies and other already expensive lines.

The Morrow Commission's complaints about "gouging" of B.C. wine drinkers by the LCB were apparently unheeded by the cabinet which hiked the prices of 28 French wines.

EIGHT DECREASED

There were total of eight price decreases for a brand of Canadian wines (Andre's), but nine were also increased.

One of the few Canadian liquor brands to rise was Seagran's Crown Royal which jumped from $7.60 to $7.90 for a 26-ounce bottle.

ADD 38 ITEMS

The cabinet order today also added 38 items to the list of products sold by the LCB, including 17 Canadian wines, seven Canadian liqueurs, five Canadian gins and one imported Scotch.

It also makes available, for the first time, 12-ounce bottles of Canadian vodka.

One of the largest increases on French wines was for Chablis white which jumps from $2.90 to $4.60.

Beaune Red goes from $3.80 to $4.70, Beaujolais Red from $2.75 to $3, Pommard Red from $6.15 to $7.30, St. Julien from $3.30 to $3.45 and Medoc from $2.25 to $2.35.

Lack of Funds Major Concern For Uvic

The biggest problem faced by the University of Victoria is not campus unrest or friction with the community. It's a lack of money.

Uvic President Bruce Partridge, speaking to a Kiwanis luncheon Tuesday, blamed insufficient funds for the fact that there will be few, if any, new programs offered by the university in the near future. He said the university is operating on a tight budget and "we can only spend our dollars once."

"We cannot be all things to all men," he said, referring to proposals that a school of nursing, a school of law and a medical school be established.

It would be useless to add new programs with insufficient operating funds. Not only would the new programs have difficulty meeting expenses but current programs would also suffer.

THREE REASONS

Partridge said operating costs of Canadian universities generally are rising at a staggering rate and cited three main reasons: rising salaries, increased enrolment and expensive equipment.

"Coupling these three effects results in phenomenal cost increases."

The Uvic head said the studio visual arts department of the School of Fine Arts is an example of an area undergoing intensive self-examination. That department, he said, must decide whether its purpose is to train art teachers, help artists or turn toward commercial and industrial design. He said it is a choice between pure art and industrial or commercial art.

"We cannot do both with limited funds, faculty and space."

"One in a thousand art school graduates gets a job as an artist," he said, "but almost every design graduate can write his own ticket."

Partridge said he is optimistic about the university's future, however, and praised the support given the school by the community in the past.

"I am confident that with the continuing support and interest of this community, we will have a university second to none in Canada."

Nixon Picks Northerner

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — Judge Harry A. Blackmun, a Minnesota moderate who is President Nixon's third choice to fill the long-vacant U.S. Supreme Court seat of Justice Abe Fortas, appeared assured today of support from both liberals and conservatives in the Senate.

Indications were that the coalition of liberal Democrats and moderate Republicans who teamed to defeat Judges Clement Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell would not pick another fight with the White House.

The 61-year-old Blackmun, from Rochester, Minn., was promised a quick hearing by the Senate judiciary committee.

Some key liberals, including former vice-president Hubert H. Humphrey, already have given him their backing. And the Senate Republican whip, Robert Griffin of Michigan, called him an excellent choice.

LEADERS APPEALING FOR MILITARY AID

By MURREY MARDER

WASHINGTON (WP) — Cambodian Premier Lon Nol issued a wholesale appeal Tuesday for military aid to repel what he called North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attempts to "conquer" his nation.

The appeal climaxes progressive hints by the new premier that outside aid would be requested if the situation deteriorated. Now, he said, "the gravity of the present situation" requires it.

The intruding forces, he said, "have systematically escalated their aggression" from "secret infiltration" to "open attacks, and stand-up battles with our defence units."

Attempts to solve the problem through negotiations have been spurned by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong, he said. As a result, Cambodia "deems it necessary to accept, from this moment on, all unconditional foreign aid from all sources for national safety."

. . . DEATH LURKS

man emergency team worked through the night studying a stressed Apollo 13 guidance system and working out new trajectories.

At the end of the night, Ralph Ragan, deputy lab chief, expressed some concern. The command ship's power shortage may cause the guidance system temperature to drop near zero. Its normal operating range is around 140 degrees. Any deviation could cause error.

This means another must. Mission trackers must watch for any errors, then order further course changes if necessary.

FEAR SECOND BLAST

Early Friday at latest, the crew must leave the lunar module and reactivate the electric power in the disabled command module. When they are ready to jettison the life-saving LM, they must turn on the command module's remaining oxygen supply.

This means turning on the same sort of systems where something exploded Tuesday night, though they had always worked adequately before.

At about 6 a.m. PST Friday the crewmen will have their last chance to readjust course, if necessary, for safe re-entry into the earth's atmosphere.

As late as possible, perhaps just an hour before re-entry — meaning about 8 a.m. Friday — the crew will jettison the LM and their attached service module so they can present their command modul's blunt heat shield to the atmosphere. Jettisoning the service module is standard procedure. They cannot retain the LM, either — it, too, lacks a heat shield and will soon burn up in the atmosphere.

NARROW SLOT

At about 9:04 a.m. Friday, the command ship should hit the atmosphere. It must re-enter a narrow slot of space — at an angle between 5.4 and 7.4 degrees.

Too steep an entry and the craft will overheat and burn despite its heat shield; too shallow and it will skip back into space like a stone.

Even at a perfect re-entry angle, the heat shield must hold up. It is designed to take 6,000 degrees.

During the brief re-entry the crew must depend for electric power on three entry and post-landing batteries that you could pack in a suitcase. They will be the only power source for life support systems, communications and a guidance computer during re-entry.

SHORT OF POWER

Normally, if a problem develops before the service module is jettisoned, the batteries can be recharged with the fuel cells — now dead. Experts at Houston estimate that the batteries still retain enough energy to furnish the electricity needed, but don't have enough left over to power spacecraft radios for 72 hours. That could become critical if the ship came down in a remote area where no ships are waiting.

The spacecraft must land in water. It should do this at 9:18 a.m. Friday. The landing system is designed for ocean return.

Seventy-two-hour radio capability or not, finally, Apollo 13 must land where it can be found quickly. This is necessary for a surely safe return.

Florida Integration Peaceful

BRADENTON, Fla. (WP)—The integration plan that Gov. Claude Kirk fought so flamboyantly last week was carried out peacefully here Tuesday with good humor among the students and quiet reluctance among their parents.

Some 1,100 black first through fourth graders rode school buses — most of them for the first time—to schools in middle and upper income white neighborhoods.

And about 1,400 white fifth and sixth graders — many of whom already had been riding buses to their "neighborhood" schools — started classes in what had been all-black schools.

At the end of the school day, Supt. Dr. Jack Davidson reported attendance in the elementary schools at 91 per cent — only four points lower than on an average day, and several points higher than it had been during the turbulent week when Kirk twice ousted local school officials and took personal control.

There was no violence, and only one minor incident was reported.

. . . BI-BI

Rhe most extensive effort in third languages should be made in elementary schools: "Children need a firm grasp of their mother tongue before leaving elementary school if they are to retain it in later years."

"There is the need to preserve the languages and cultures of new immigrants while also integrating them into Canadian society," the report says at another point.

To this end, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission should remove restrictions on private broadcasting in languages other than English and French and the CBC should "recognize the place of languages other than English and French in Canadian life."

The commission recommends that provinces which have not yet done so enact fair employment and accommodation practices and appoint full-time administrators of their human rights legislation.

It repeats a recommendation of other volumes that the same conditions for citzenship, the right to vote and to stand for election for public office be accorded to all immigrants.

It also urges that special instruction in English or French be provided for children who enter school with inadequate knowledge of the language and that Ottawa help the provinces to meet the costs.

Stretched Ferry Ready April 23

The public will have a chance to inspect the new stretched Queen of Victoria ferry for a limited time April 23, before a special guest cruise off the Victoria waterfront.

Victoria Chamber of Commerce is taking the opportunity to mark two anniversaries of the B.C. ferry system by organizing some of its members for a 1¾-hour cruise with Premier Bennett and guests of the government, holding a reception after the cruise and honoring Bennett at a dinner in the Empress.

This is the 10th anniversary of ferry operations — government management started Jan. 1, 1960 and the first B.C. ferry went into service June 15, 1960.

HOTEL RECEPTION

The Queen of Victoria will land at Black Ball Transport dock at 1:30 p.m. following regular departure of Mv Coho and will be open to the public until 3:15.

Chamber members and special guests will go aboard for the cruise, returning to the Black Ball dock about 5 p.m.

Six Australian wines, seven miscellaneous ones including the French Dubonnet and two Canadian rums also increased in price.

The Liquor Board decision was dated April 10 and was approved by the cabinet this week.

The cabinet also set a salary of $22,000 for the current year for acting Liquor Board chairman William Bruce.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET, JR.

Noses bleed more often in the summertime, and day-after-day dry weather is to blame, expecially in areas of the Southwest.

The inside of your nose is a superbly constructed organ for humidifying the air you breathe before it gets to the lungs. This wonderful air-conditioning machine contains an intricate system of blood vessels that course very near to the surface of the inside of the nose. As the dry air passes over the lining of the nose, it pickes up water from the area. It thereby becomes humidified. The water is supplied to the lining membrane by the underlying blood vessels.

When the summer days are particularly dry, the lining membrane of your nose becomes drier than usual and thinner. The blood vessels are thereby exposed more directly to the air and then they tend to break and bleed. A sure cure is a humid day.

The Numbers Game with Phosphates in detergents

A PUBLIC INFORMATION STATEMENT BY AMWAY OF CANADA, LTD.

Recently it has become popular to compile and circulate lists purporting to show the percentage of phosphate in detergents and allied cleaning products. The apparent purpose of these lists is to encourage the reader to use low phosphate content products in the interest of cleaner lake and stream water.

While the intent of this activity is laudable, the lists we have seen are so full of errors and omissions we believe they are best ignored. Here is why we make this statement:

First: Amway makes 21 laundry and general cleaning products. Eleven contain no phosphate, 2 less than 2%, and the other 8 have varying amounts according to the purpose they are intended to serve. Yet one widely published list shows only ONE listing of Amway — using simply the trademark "Amway" with no designation of the type of product and showing "73.5% phosphate." To publish a list simply showing a company name with a percentage seems to us about as inaccurate as to publish the name "General Motors — 400 h.p." in a list of auto horsepower ratings.

Second: Another list compares Amway's enzyme pre-soak product (TriZyme) with a group of heavy duty and light duty detergents. This is like comparing apples with bananas. Products, if to be meaningfully compared on the basis of phosphate content, should be carefully classified as to intended use. An enzyme pre-soak should be compared with other enzyme pre-soaks, a heavy duty detergent with other heavy duty detergents, a dishwashing detergent with other dishwashing detergents, etc.

Third: No mention of the amount of the product one would expect to use is made in most of the lists. A low phosphate detergent used in lavish quantities in order to get clothes clean may actually put considerably more phosphate in the water than a high phosphate product that need only be used sparingly because of its high cleaning power. A low phosphate product used frequently might put much more phosphate into the water than a higher phosphate product used only occasionally.

Fourth: One list recognized the fallacy of comparing products merely on a percentage basis, and set about to correct the error by publishing a comparison based on grams of phosphate used per wash cycle and parts per million in the effluent. Unfortunately the compiler of this list flunked his arithmetic. Grams per wash were listed as Amway S-A-8: 39.9, and included in the list were six others listed as 18.1, 20.0, 23.5, 24.1, 26.1, and 27.1 grams per wash cycle respectively. Our laboratory carefully re-checked the work and found the grams per cycle comparison is actually Amway S-A-8: 36.8, and the six others mentioned above are 38.4 instead of 18.1; 34.7 instead of 20.0; 51 instead of 23.5; 44.1 instead of 24.1; 34.2 instead of 26.1; and 37.4 instead of 27.1. In addition, the use amount quoted for Amway S-A-8 is almost double what many users actually put in their machine, so for many users the grams per wash load of Amway S-A-8 would be closer to 20 for actual use dilutions.

A Better Guide. We suggest a good general rule to follow regarding phosphate content in cleaning products and detergents is that with present day brands, most products intended for the same use contain relatively similar percentages of phosphate by weight. Classifications are as follows:

Classification	Phosphate Content expressed as % of PO_4
Heavy duty laundry powders (Amway S-A-8 Plus — 34.8%; Amway S-A-8 Special — 10%)	30 — 45%
Light duty laundry powders	15 — 30%
Liquid hand dishwashing detergents (Amway Dish Drops – 0%; Amway L.O.C. Suds – 0%)	less than 1%
Machine dishwasher detergents (Amway Automatic Dishwashing Compound — 33.3%)	30 — 45%
Liquid hand laundry products (Amway L.O.C. Regular — 0%; Amway Germicidal — 0%)	0 — 10%
Liquid all purpose cleaners (Amway Zoom — 1.4%; Amway Industroclean — 1.3%; Amway Car Wash — 0%)	0 — 7%
Enzyme pre-soaks (Amway Tri-Zyme — 54.2%	about 50%
Water softening powders (Amway Water Softening Compound — 83.8%)	about 80%

But note this: The above percentages reflect phosphate content expressed as percent of PO_4. The phosphate compound used in these products when so expressed is only about 33% phosphorous, the element all the talk is about. Therefore, total phosphorous content of the products is about one-third that shown above.

What You Can Do about it. We suggest that if you have a concern about phosphate getting into streams and lakes the following would be a common sense approach:

1. Work with your local governments to encourage all municipalities in your area to build 3-stage sewage disposal systems as soon as possible. Hundreds of industrial and household chemicals and pollutants from human wastes are going into streams now because of inadequate sewage treatment facilities. The time has come to build facilities to clean up all of our sewage water and control the total problem. It is estimated removal of phosphate and certain other chemicals from effluent water of a 3-stage disposal system can be accomplished for an operating cost of less than $3. per person per year. This is a broader and more effective solution to the problem than reformulating detergents and other household products, because at least half of the phosphate in sewage comes from human wastes, and reformulated detergents won't change that. Also, reformulation of cleaning products with phosphate substitutes that totally eliminate the phosphate, even if technically and economically feasible (which it presently is not) might result in only substituting other ingredients with other problems when the effluent reaches streams.

2. Since phosphate content products are used principally in the laundry, it may be possible to dispose of your washing machine water in another way than through the public drain. You may be accomplishing this already, since correctly built septic tanks probably introduce no phosphate into public waters.

3. If you are connected to a city sewer system which does not have complete disposal facilities, and phosphate nutrients in streams are considered a serious problem in your community, you can use a general purpose non-phosphate liquid detergent to do your laundry such as Amway's unique "L.O.C." You must be prepared for a lower level of dirt and soil removal from clothes, however, and you may have to resort to some of the laundering techniques of bygone years such as overnight soaking and boiling.

4. Amway offers a full line of cleaning products carefully formulated for specific purposes. Amway's high performance products used according to directions will produce good results even when used sparingly. When nothing but phosphate containing products will do the job, Amway's products of that type can be relied upon to do the work most economically and with no need to use excessive quantities.

5. Amway has small quantities of a heavy duty low phosphate laundry detergent available for special situations (see description below).

What Is Amway Doing about Pollution?

Amway is deeply concerned, like any good citizen. Here is Amway's "clean water" program:

1. Even though there is a difference of scientific opinion as to whether the elimination of phosphates in detergents will have a significant effect on eutrophication of lakes, Amway chemists are actively evaluating phosphate substitutes for detergent use that will be economic, efficient, and not cause unforeseen worse problems than phosphate is alleged to cause now.

2. Amway is now introducing to the Canadian market a heavy duty laundry detergent with less than 10% phosphate. The product contains a phosphate substitute which is expensive and will be in extremely short supply for a long time to come. Therefore Amway distributors have been instructed to offer this product only to customers whose laundries are connected to public sewers without phosphate disposal systems, and where phosphate nutrients are considered to be causing an immediate problem. The product presently costs more to use, but gives results equivalent to good quality higher phosphate products. We believe it is the best low phosphate product that can be made immediately, though future research will undoubtedly make possible equally fine products at lower cost.

3. Amway has long been in the forefront in the field of promoting clean water. Amway marketed detergent products with biodegradable surfactants as much as five years before most of the industry converted. Surfactants are an indispensable ingredient in any detergent product, and present day surfactants used in all detergent products are of a type that can be consumed by bacteria in sewage plants and streams and converted to harmless materials.

4. Some confusion exists in understanding the new terminology regarding pollution matters. For instance, biodegradability of surfactants is technically an entirely different matter than acceleration of plant growth in lake waters by excess nutrients such as phosphate. Many new terms have only recently come into popular use, such as eutrophication, ecology, thermal pollution, oxygen depletion and algal nutrients. This necessitates more exact definition of formerly used terms, such as biodegradability of surfactants. Amway will conduct an educational program to provide its distributors and customers with better understanding of these terms. Future label and advertising copy will include the new terminology with today's connotations.

5. Amway suggests citizens keep these matters in proper perspective. Cleaning up the pollution of our environment — water, air and land — is a great challenge for all of us in this decade. It is a serious problem, with world-wide ramifications. To arouse public interest and support, predictions of impending disaster are being widely published. Facts are not always being separated from opinions. Industry and government become easy scapegoats. But this must not lead to hastily contrived programs and actions that may actually worsen the situation by using funds that could be better spent on well planned long term solutions. We all want a clean environment. We will achieve it best by well reasoned and well planned actions based upon scientifically proven facts, not by hasty actions based on emotional speculation.

Saigon Warned Against Attacks Into Cambodia

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The United States has warned the Saigon government against permitting its troops to launch any more attacks in strength against Communist forces across the border in Cambodia, administration officials said today.

U.S. officials believe any South Vietnamese assaults on the Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops in eastern Cambodia could touch off a much wider war — with an adverse effect on the allied position in all Southeast Asia.

The high level American view, based on latest intelligence reports from the field, is that military operations by the estimated 40,000 communist troops in Cambodia are designed primarily to enlarge and secure Communist enclaves along the South Vietnam border.

The assessment here is that Hanoi, while stirring up local peasants to make as much trouble as possible for the Cambodian government, does not want to undertake a major assault of its own against the Cambodian capital, Phnom Penh. While the Communist forces could probably make short work of Cambodia's rather inefficient 30,000-man army, Hanoi is believed anxious to avoid any such operation. An outright Communist contest in Cambodia would turn world opinion definitely against Hanoi and the Viet Cong.

However, according to officials here, any major attacks to drive the Communists out of their sanctuaries along the border might well turn the red ambition westward, with Hanoi believing it had no alternative but to overthrow the Phnom Penh government if its positions along the border became untenable.

The Communist drive to widen and secure sanctuaries along the border, together with the efforts to stir rebellious peasants against the Phnom Penh government, is believed to have two principal objectives:

● To enable the Communists to re-establish access to Cambodian rice sources which are denied them by the current uncertainty in the border area.

● To make life so miserable for the Phnom Penh government that it will agree to permit the shipment northward from the port of Sihanoukville of a considerable amount of Communist military supplies which have been blocked there since Prince Norodom Sihanouk was ousted last month as chief of state.

●

The Communist forces along the border in Cambodia are reserves which move in and out of the Vietnam war and, as such, are a continued threat to the Allies in South Vietnam. However, U.S. officials are convinced that they can be dealt with over the long run as they are committed piecemeal to Vietnam conflict.

If they are attacked strongly and pushed back into Cambodia, Hanoi might well find it advisable to attack the heart of Cambodia and secure the whole country as a base for operations against the Allies in Vietnam, Laos and Thailand.

North Vietnamese Capture Two Laotian Positions

VIENTIANE (UPI) — North Vietnamese troops have captured two government positions in Northern Laos and are keeping up their sporadic shelling of the former U.S. supply base at Sam Thong, military sources said today.

There were no reports on whether helicopters were able to get through to Sam Thong with supplies for the government troops there.

North Vietnamese troops described as in a "fairly large" concentration were a mile and a half west of Sam Thong, the sources said. Sam Thong is 80 miles north of Vientiane.

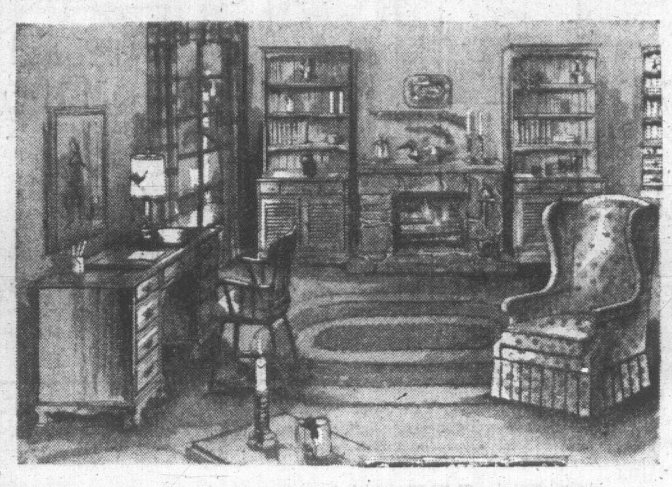

Delayed reports indicated that government forces lost a position southwest of the mountaintop air strip of Tha Tam Bleung, six miles northeast of Sam Thong, Monday.

The North Vietnamese captured a guerrilla position 65 miles northeast of Sam Thong along the Highway 7 supply route leading out of North Vietnam, the sources said U.S. jets have been making heavy air strikes against the road.

The sources said the guerrillas suffered light casualties and are now trying to reach a larger government garrison at Bouam Long, northeast of the Plain of Jars, along with a number of civilian refugees.

Rebel With a Cause

DR. SCOTT WALLACE, WHOSE aggressive and peppery critical style won the Oak Bay riding for the Social Credit Party in 1969 after 18 years of Liberal representation, is finding politics not all that he had hoped it to be. For one thing, people—and particularly his own party—won't do what he wants them to do. And to a militant reformer who insists on quick results, that is intolerable. Dr. Wallace has reached the point where he publicly announces that unless he can feel that his crusading is getting somewhere he will not be a candidate in the next election, and, indeed, may resign before that time comes.

Dr. Wallace is being completely honest—a refreshing quality in the political field—for he publicized his feelings regarding the hospital bed shortage before his election and gave fair warning that he would not hesitate to criticize his own party's administration if he felt it necessary. That necessity moves him now, for he has made it plain what he thinks of a regime which wins re-election on a platform of service to people and then almost immediately cuts down on hospital grants. When it comes to matters of health and hospital accommodation, Dr. Wallace, M.D., is no silent backbencher.

While the provincial government is rightly appalled by the steady rise in hospital costs—an attitude it shares with the federal government and the individual citizen—it has reacted clumsily and with incredibly poor timing to the demands of the situation. There are many British Columbians, inside the medical profession and outside of it, who have come to the conclusion that the series of halts and delays in the provision of more hospital beds in Greater Victoria is due in large measure to a deliberate decision by the government — for reasons of its own — to deny funds which it knows are necessary. It is difficult to explain the long procrastination on any other rational basis.

Even admitting that the situation has been compounded by the slow toil of local regional and hospital authorities, it must be remembered that the provincial government is the senior body and that proper leadership should long ago have remedied the chaotic state to which our hospital bed problem has descended.

How else explain the unbelievable situation in which the new Eric Martin Institute—built, be it noted, without reference to the opinions of the local psychiatrists who must use it—stood empty for weeks after construction was completed because agreement could not be reached on an advance provincial operating grant to get it into action? How else explain the long series of delays, between July, 1968, and this month, in obtaining agreement on the planning and implementation of a relatively minor rehabilitation of a whole ward in the south wing of the Royal Jubilee Hospital? For nearly two years, in the midst of a crying need for beds, it stood unused. How else explain the present stall on an expenditure of a mere $10,000 which would put more than 25 beds into immediate use in the recently vacated Bay Pavilion at Jubilee?

When the provincial government really wishes to get action it does not hesitate to step in and ensure that municipalities and other junior administrative levels carry out its wishes. Yet the hospital crisis has gone on and on — even sidetracked into squabbles about street extensions—without the decisive action which the serious situation calls for.

Well might Dr. Wallace decide that he could no longer support a Social Credit government loudly dedicated to a policy of service to people. Well might many a British Columbia voter, hobbling around with a trick knee or a cramping gall bladder for more than a year while he waits for a hospital bed in this twentieth century, decide likewise.

Accuracy and the Arms Race

EACH YEAR, IN THE COLD logic of megatons, troop divisions and missiles, the British-based Institute for Strategic Studies explains in detail how the world is building up its weapons systems and how these systems could be employed. This year's strategic survey suggests, for the first time in two decades, that the increasing accuracy of nuclear missiles may tempt one of the two superpowers to launch a pre-emptive strike against the other.

At present the United States is said to have about 1,054 land-based inter-continental ballistic missiles compared with 1,200 on the Soviet side. But the United States has about 4,235 nuclear warheads available against the Soviet's 1,880, and by 1975 the U.S. plans to build this number to 11,000. The survey adds that the Soviet Union "could presumably increase its numerical strength by some similar percentage.

On the eve of the resumption of the Stragetic Arms Limitation Talks this is disquieting news. The Nixon administration has had a tendency to inaugurate new weapons systems and justify them as a contribution to the success of the talks or as hedges against the possible failure of the meetings. This was the ambiguous logic attached to the anti-ballistic missile debate. In Moscow the troika leadership of Brezhnev-Kosygin-Podgorney has taken no decisive steps to halt the arms build-up either.

Against the already very shaky background of the SALT talks and the Institute's warning that "increasing accuracy of nuclear missiles presents an even greater threat to the strategic balance than multi-headed weapons such as MIRV," the spiral of mutual terror-escalation continues. Doubling the accuracy of a warhead's delivery may have five or six times the effect of doubling the warhead's power. The blast of a two-megaton bomb, a mile or so from the target, creates only about 20 more pounds per square inch pressure than a one megaton blast. But a one-megaton bomb half-a-mile from target adds 100 pounds per square inch to the blast effect.

If such accuracy becomes commonplace, the security of land-based ICBMs would be greatly reduced. This technology would change the tenure of the SALT talks considerably as the number of warheads became secondary in importance to efficient guidance systems. "For these and other reasons," the Institute says, "SALT, which has often been described as the most important arms-control negotiation in history, will also be the most complicated . . ."

No one has expected the talks to be less than complicated. But the basic issue remains a simple one: world security or world destruction. That, at least, is clearly understandable.

The Message from Selkirk

WHATEVER REASON IS SUGgested for the victory of Mr. Douglas Rowland, the NDP candidate who held Selkirk, Manitoba, for his party in last Monday's federal byelection—his personal popularity, his appearance in an NDP stronghold, or as recipient of support directed to Premier Schreyer—there is no doubt that it was a resounding one. On his first try as a candidate he received more votes than his combined opposition.

The federal Liberals wanted Selkirk and wanted it badly. A Liberal victory there would have suggested a successful inroad by the Trudeau forces into the Prairies, and provided some grounds for hope that federal policies were generating some magnetism in that part of Canada.

Federal and Manitoba provincial NDP leaders are entitled to draw whatever satisfaction they wish from the outcome. But no one can say that Douglas Rowland won by a fluke.

". . . he's a very decent lad . . . never touches drugs . . ."

For Consumers

Jack Scott's recent series of articles on supermarket buying and general consumer unwariness was first-class reporting of a significant problem. One has only to observe the "jungle" in action to see how easily the supermarkets control the environment.

Perhaps one way to make the public more price conscious would be through special radio programming for consumers, but unhappily the private stations are hopelessly given to commercial advertising, which compounds the problem.

However, the shortcomings of private radio cannot be charged to the CBC whose programs over the years have been in excellent balance, providing, among other things, an informative service for consumers in the interests of a more discriminating buying public.

Perhaps the CRTC should seriously consider making the private stations carry all such CBC programs. At any rate, Mr. Scott is making a priceless contribution, with articles that are worth having in booklet form for the widest possible use. — L. Ryan, Secretary Treasurer, Victoria Labour Council.

FROM OTTAWA

By MAURICE WESTERN

Mr. Benson is Falling Behind With His Correspondence

SINCE everybody loves a good mystery yarn, it is small wonder that the capital is all a-tingle over the bizarre case of the wandering Treasury Board Minute. There are two versions of the materialization of Minute No. 695695. According to the somewhat elfish account of John Diefenbaker, it simply came drifting here and there. According to the darker suspicion of Bud Drury, president of the treasury board, it was "purloined."

Western

Although Mr. Diefenbaker's words are variously interpreted, the most plausible explanation is that a little bird brought it. This will have wide appeal for nature lovers and it is generally agreed that this has been a good year for little birds in Ottawa.

Exciting Story

But Mr. Drury's tale, as his partisans point out, is more exciting and much closer to the James Bond tradition. What went wrong with our security? How was the citadel breached?

The more the problem is considered, the more fascinating it gets. Let us consider the coup from the standpoint of the operative. He must have known, first, that Minute No. 695695 existed. Who whispered to whom? Secondly, he must have had knowledge of its location. Where? In the Confederation Building? Under Mr. Drury's pillow? In a hat-box at Ottawa station? Thirdly, he had to get it. And finally he had to cover his tracks.

All remains wild surmise while Mr. Drury's task force checks the files for Mr. Diefenbaker's finger-prints and queries Rockcliffe citizens about ex-prime ministers with sprained ankles.

Meanwhile, thanks to bird or operative, we have the Minute; a most thought-provoking document.

Compulsive Writers

It originated in an interesting problem of state; the sudden compulsive urge of citizens to communicate with their friendly minister of finance about the White Paper on Tax Reform. The minute says that Mr. Benson has on hand a backlog of about 5,000 letters, petitions and submissions with more arriving at the rate of 250 a day. Since the current output of replies is approximately 50 per day, there is a departmental productivity lag.

According to the prime minister, this is a "very encouraging response" and according to the Minute, Mr. Benson has "considered the alternatives available to deal with this serious problem." He has decided to set up a "special project team" to function over the next three or four months at a cost of $190,000.

Where will the $190,000 come from? It will come from the taxpayers. This will be immensely gratifying to mandarins of the avant-garde because we have now officially reached the point at which we are taxed for our thoughts on taxation.

The moral is obvious. The more lurid and inflammatory our thoughts, the more we will get for our tax money.

One might suppose that in tackling this problem the government would draw on the talents of its 255,000 public servants. While it is apparent from present practice (especially Mr. Kierans' practice) that they are not suited to specialized tasks, — which regularly go to outsiders — there must be some who could qualify as letter-writers.

The difficulty may be that no one in government service understands Mr. Benson's best seller.

In any case the great experiment in participatory democracy requires, first, a systems study (P. S. Ross and Co.) and secondly, as project manager, a management consultant at $200 a day. The Minute also authorizes the engagement of 10 chartered accountants at the same rate — plus $26,000 for travel and living accommodation. Other items are enumerated; administrative assistance, secretarial assistance, rental of equipment and $1,500 for messenger services.

Apprehensive

There is also a contingencies item of $15,000. This scarcely requires explanation. The more Mr. Benson contemplates his mail, the greater is his apprehension that the response may become even more encouraging. April, as every management consultant knows, is income tax month; a time when citizens are more than usually disposed to share their thoughts with friendly finance ministers.

Although Mr. Drury's reaction to the appearance of the Minute was initally adverse, it should be of distinct help to Mr. Benson's prospective correspondents. According to the final paragraph, departmental officers are to be assigned as they can be spared to replace the chartered accountants. Graduate students will also be employed in support of the program.

To Pick Pen Pals

The implication is clear. Citizens who desire answers from chartered accountants should write now. Otherwise the assurances of earnest consideration will come from departmental officers assigned from other duties and likely to be jaundiced from excessive brooding over those individual contracts at $200 a day. The correspondent who waits too long may have to be satisfied with Mr. Benson's thought as filtered through the mind of a graduate student as yet personally unscathed by the tax collector.

Even Treasury Minutes are not proof against hazards. If the calculations are wrong and the flood continues to rise, it may not be possible to dispense so readily with accountants and management consultants earnestly dedicated to participatory democracy. Mr. Benson, presumably, will keep a wary eye on the state of his contingencies. Meanwhile he might be well advised to send a little bird fluttering over the countryside in search of the first welcome signs that aroused taxpayers are running out of ink.

Correspondence From Our Readers

Decal Hitch

For eight years now I've been putting new B.C. license plates on my 1962 Pontiac. For seven of these years I've had the same trailer hitch on the car. No problem.

Recently, the Motor Vehicle Testing Station failed my Pontiac. Why? Because the ball of the trailer hitch was obscuring the license plate. "Take if off" said the man, "we have to be able to see the decal at the bottom. That's $1.75 please and you'll have to come in again."

So, just because the licensing people dreamed up a lovely new 'Beautiful British Columbia' plate but forgot all about trailer hitches, thousands (100,000 is the actual estimate that Mr. Hatfield gave me) of B.C. taxpayers are going to have to take off their trailer hitches during the week and then put them back at the week-end for hauling their boats, campers etc.

Will this ruling make for safety? Hardly! Far more likely it'll lead to a horrible series of ghastly accidents due to loose trailer hitches.

Why not leave the hitches done up tightly and move the decal to the upper part of the license plate? It seems likely that this will be the solution but apparently it cannot be done before 1973. In the meantime, can someone lend me a great big wrench and 50c to pay for my re-examination? — R. G. Napier, 1930 Woodley.

Public Transportation

I agree with John Mika that better transportation facilities are needed in Victoria — but I disagree with his argument that Saanich should have built cross-town roads before building McKenzie — and the reason is an aesthetic reason. If roads must be built, it seems more practical to build them and let the neighborhoods develop around them than to disrupt established neighborhoods by cutting a swath through them which destroys their entire character.

This is what would happen if, as Mr. Mika suggested, Saanich were to extend Tattersall. It is now a charming neighborhood and the street is noticeably busy between the morning rush to work and the evening rush home. Does this mean that the beauty of the area should be destroyed 24 hours a day to accommodate the automobiles which use it heavily two hours a day? For if Saanich were to extend Tattersall, they would also widen it, straighten it, and forever slice in two a delightful residential area.

And why must we keep spending money on more roads when we know more roads create more traffic which creates the need for more roads—adds the roar of the auto motors to our lives, the blaring noise of horns to our ears, the questionable merits of gas fumes to our lungs — plus of course the convenience to our lazy bodies to keep off our lazier feet.

Public transportation? Yes. And let's stop sacrificing our taxes for additional miles of cement. —— Mrs. W. T. Wooley, 1238 Tattersall.

Park Protection

The young people who are trying to keep cars out of Beacon Hill park have my full support, and it is a pity that it is left to them to do it, and I do hope the people in charge do not allow any more apartments to surround and darken the park. — Sarah Robinson, 860 Richmond Rd.

Subsidizing Outsiders

An article by CP writer, Page 9 April 6, Mike Williams, is worthy of considerable thought. The heading, "B.C. Stingiest Province in Industrial Incentives" is, I think, a slanted one implying that we should go out of our way to induce industry to come to the province and that we should if necessary make large financial concessions to firms to entice them to locate here.

A few months back there was an article on this subject in Saturday Review in which the writer, who, although his present livelihood stems from promoting such projects and advising companies as to where they can get the best deal, took issue with the principle. He considers it ludicrous that all levels of government in all areas compete with each other to entice industry to set up in their favored area. The competition is of course welcomed by industry's leaders who sit back and let the auction roll on until the deal they get is so good, the concessions they get are so enormous that the community takes years to recoup. It's a mug's game, the taxpayer being the mug as usual.

A case in point he makes concerns the heavy water plant in Nova Scotia which has cost the much over-burdened taxpayers of that province millions. Left alone industry would have settled on the best place for it to locate and it would have gone there without dubious bribery, perhaps to Nova Scotia.

So B.C. is miserly—to pay $2 to $5 a ton to the iron producers for producing coal? Ridiculous. To pay copper producers one cent a ton up to $250,000 per year for producing copper? Astonishing. The taxpayer pays the companies a subsidy for iron and copper exports—in effect we subsidize Japan, for example, since obviously they buy our minerals at a subsidized price, manufacture them and sell the products back to us.

These subsidies are gifts from our taxpayers. A loan to help an industry establish might be reasonable since a loan must be repaid; but surely no gifts.

Canadians are waking to the fact that the U.S.A. industrial giants are looking covetously at our mineral wealth simply because that of the Americans is become exhausted. They are lobbying for "a continental resource and energy pool" and are blackmailing us by cutting our oil quotas to the south.

We as a country are obviously rapidly coming to the position where we can bargain strongly simply because we have natural resources that others want. They want them badly and they will pay a competitive price, a fair price. They understand trade and costs probably better than we seem to do and they respect a good bargainer. If they won't pay the price today they will tomorrow and surely we should have something for our children to sell tomorrow.

To develop our own secondary industry what is wrong with our government putting a "capital development tax" on every ton of iron ore, of copper concentrates, of coal that leaves this country? The tax would not really be a tax for it would be held in escrow, interest free, and any time the importing company decided it had enough in the kitty to erect a processing plant here in Canada all it would need would be to demonstrate the feasibility and our government would turn the money over to them as the plant was built.—F. Y. Craig, 322 Lady Simcoe.

Looking Back

From the Times of April 15, 1910.

Drivers of horse vehicles in too many cases seem to think they have been given special powers to treat bicycle riders with contempt. With regard to the snorting and scorching motor car, which tears through the streets, a menace to the life and limb and a general terror to everything that breathes the breath of life, it has made its annual debut now that the highways have assumed their summer form.

Canada's Expo Pavilion 'Absolute Masterpiece'

By JOHN CANADAY

OSAKA, Japan—The function of a world's fair, accepted at its professed idealistic level, is to open channels of communication that lead to international understanding.

We all know, however, that what this boils down to is a matter of international showing off. You don't have to be a cynic to recognize that each nation's pavilion is intended as a competitive idealized self-portrait, even when the job backfires.

As far as I am concerned, the Russian Pavilion at Expo 70 is an example of backfire. But I suspect that it will end as an effective piece of propaganda for a mass public, which is what counts.

The pavilion is a monstrous structure, and just about everything has been crowded into it in hundreds of compartments arranged without discernible logical sequence.

You find a group of the finest icons from Russian museums (exposed to light both too brilliant and too hot for them, as well as to God-knows-what murderous changes of temperature and humidity at night) and, not far away, examples of the most debased contemporary craft.

Russia Haphazard

Memorabilia of great figures in 19th-century Russian music and literature, such as Tchaikovsky's piano, are here if you can find them. And there is a mammoth space exhibit that you can't miss. These are good spots.

But you feel, once you have staggered out of the pavilion, that you have been exposed to the utterly unselective culture of a people who are doing everything at once in a haphazard fashion. This is certainly not true of the Russians but it is true of their self-portrait at Expo 70.

Nevertheless, you leave this tasteless hodgepodge feeling that Russia is big and strong, if only because it has exhausted you.

America Boring

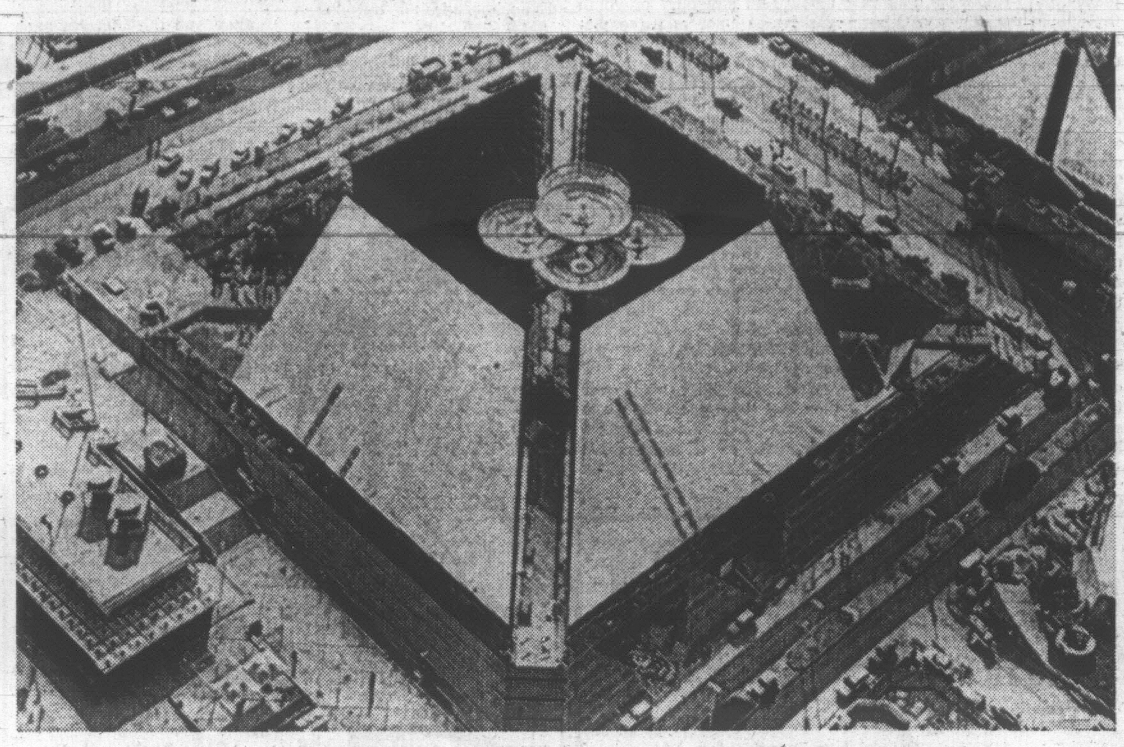

Thus the Russian Pavilion is more potent than the U.S. Pavilion, which is tasteful indeed but likely to lull you to sleep. This entire structure, for 999 visitors out of 1,000 is only a shelter or a piece of moon rock. But the other exhibits, when you come back to them after a tour of the other big national pavilions, seem even more static and underplayed, no doubt deliberately as a contradiction to Americans' reputation as braggarts.

But to underplay at Expo 70 is to become invisible. Compounding this initial error, the U.S. asks visitors to read explanations of the exhibit. The explanations are brief, but no one wants to read here. They want to listen as they look, preferably from a conveyor belt.

Worst of all, even assuming that the legends will be read, they are written in a way that assumes a background of Western humanistic experience that simply does not exist for the Japanese.

The U.S. Pavilion might just as well be cleared right now of everything but the moon rock, which would make room for the crowds that want to see it and would release the other exhibits to the collegiate circulating exhibition route back home for which they seem to have been designed.

In spite of the fact that this self-portrait was intended to portray Americans as a fine, substantial people who invented apple pie (which, by the way, is extremely popular in Japan), it may leave you feeling instead that you are a member of weakening culture preoccupied with subjective refinements to such an extent that the Russians, big sweaty vulgarians that they are, will be wiping us out any day now. Mind you, I'm talking about self-portraits as offered at Expo, not about the facts of the case on either side.

Aerial view of Canadian Pavilion praised by New York Times art critic.

'Wonderful Land'

Far and away the most successful of the national pavilions as a convincing portrait of a wonderful land inhabited by wonderful people, is Canada's.

Its spectacular sloping mirrored walls, designed by the Vancouver firm of Erickson-Massey, form a hollow truncated pyramid around an open courtyard where open-air performances of Canadian folk dances and the like are held on a platform surrounded by a pool. From this area you go underground, as you do in several of the big pavilions.

There you see a wonderful, country in an absolute masterpiece of national presentation. An electronically programmed featurette with lights flashing, mannequins appearing and disappearing, and a dozen lively tricks is emceed by Teizo Muta, a sort of Japanese Bob Hope, who delights his audience by putting on an Osaka accent, which for the Japanese has connotations similar to those that Brooklynese has for Americans. Then you move to the first amphitheatre, where the serious program begins.

Until last week I had never really thought of Canada as a marvellous country. Admirable and all that, but a bit dull. I don't feel that way anymore.

For perhaps 20 minutes which I wished would not end, scenes of Canadian wilderness, from plains and forests to deserts I didn't know existed and from frozen seas of planetary dimensions, were projected on an enormous triangular screen to a score that I can only describe as musical but nonmelodic and frequently onomatopoetic.

There were wild animals but no human beings at all, and no cities. The images dealt with only the first part of the pavilion's theme, "The Vastness of Our Land . . ." and I was truly moved.

So were the Japanese. The Japanese are not by nature or habit a demonstrative audience, but now and then (as in one shot of an endless field of sunflowers) they would be stirred to a mass sigh of surprise and pleasure, perhaps of awe, to the totally foreign yet totally real and understandable images.

Restful Films

After such intensity, a bit of relief is called for, and in the next auditorium a light hearted animated cartoon, done in mosaics of black and white, is a short hand introduction to urban life at its liveliest — including professional hockey. Then in auditorium three, there is another movie about Canadians that in its way is just as great as the one on the wilderness.

I have neglected to say that not a word is spoken during either of these movies. The sound follows an itinerant rock band in its psychedelic bus — in actual fact, the bus in which the photographers travelled — from a large city out into the province.

The rock score, by a Canadian group called "The Collectors," is imposed arbitrarily on the entire film and is first rate. It fits, whether we are in a dance hall or seeing the children in a school far out in the hinterlands.

Perhaps the picture of the Canadians is idealized, but it never looks it. They seem to be just wonderful plain people, sympathetic in the terms of any culture, and fascinating to the Japanese.

Back to Wilderness

At the end of the film the band is loaded onto a ship that sails away toward a vast horizon of sky and water, an effect that somehow has no suggestion at all of cliche and brings us back to the wilderness where we began.

With all of this echoing, you are glad to look at a series of more expectable exhibits touting Canadian development in the long exit hallway. If this is what these people in that great land are doing, you're interested.

The Canadian Pavilion theme, which is "Discovery," is amplified in the theme sentence, "The vastness of our country, the diversity of our people, and the dynamics of change involve us constantly in discovery," and I must say that for this member of an effete culture that somehow managed to land men on the moon, the Canadian Pavilion was a discovery indeed.

His Country Is Catching Up To Justify Callaghan Faith

TORONTO DAILY STAR
An Editorial

Morley Callaghan is one of the bravest of us.

He is a fine writer, clear and sure as only the very best writers of this century have been; and since he has written all his life about Canada, he has given us a precious idea of what our own lives are like and what it is about this country we can cherish.

It has cost him more than one can easily estimate. When he was young, his constituency was outside Canada. The people who read him and respected him lived in New York and Paris. The men he knew overseas, Hemingway and Fitzgerald, were famous. Callaghan was arguably as good a writer as either.

★

But he came back here to live and write, with a kind of instinctive, driving faith that the consciousness of the country would some day catch up with him.

It could not have been easy, but perhaps it had to be that way; Callaghan's perceptions about the way life is lived here are so deep and natural that possibly he could not have been the same man in another country.

Still, to live and work almost unknown in a cold and uncaring nation is an act of courage, and one for which every one of us Callaghan has touched should thank him.

This is not to say that he has been an easy mind to live with. Many of his characters take their roots in the very worst impulses of the country, the shabbiness and selfishness and terse, closed dullness which keep good men here always close to rage.

Morley Callaghan is more than a Canadian writer, of course. He writes about people who happen to live in Canada, and so well that it seems to Canadians that they could never have existed anywhere else. But we have no lease on their reality; now, more than ever, Callaghan is being discovered and read in the rest of the world. He is an international artist, one of the first and best we have produced.

There is something about Callaghan as a public figure, however, that is purely Canadian. As a panelist on Fighting Words, Citizens' Forum and Now I Ask You he tried, in his drawling, skeptical tenor, to provoke his audience, his opponents, and the whole country into a sense of intelligence and wit. Yet he remains comfortably himself; in public, he delights in not being recognized.

★

It is possible that Callaghan's cultivated anonymity is at an end. He has just been given the $50,000 Royal Bank Award, and in this country nothing destroys a man's public privacy faster than a large chunk of tax-free money.

He is now, in the Canadian mind, a recognized public figure, with a cheque to show for it. Callaghan, of course, doesn't give a damn. The cheque goes in the bank (along with the $15,000 Molson prize from the Canada Council), and Callaghan goes back to his typewriter.

The point, however, is that Morley Callaghan is precisely the right person to be that Royal Bank Award, even though he may be mildly amused at the source of it.

★

He has given us his subtle, powerful books; he has carried the flavor of the country to the world; he has even managed to persuade us that under all that dreariness and chicanery and purse-mouthed cant, we may be a little noble after all.

'Lost Weekend' Replaces Jail

By COLIN CHAPMAN

SYDNEY — The state of Queensland—which is the whole north-eastern part of the Australian continent and bigger than Britain, France, West and East Germany, Holland and Belgium put together—is often the object of scorn and satire for an old-fashioned outlook on life. In Queensland it is forbidden to listen to, let alone own, the sound track of the American rock musical, Hair.

But Queensland is now pioneering a program of prison reform that will put it ahead of most of the Western world. The first part, which will operate later this year, is a system of punishing first offenders, vandals and other petty criminals by taking away their weekends.

Those punished will keep their normal jobs, live with their families during the week, but over the weekend they will be locked up until they have served the number of days of imprisonment imposed on them. They will not be guarded by warders, but they will have to attend classes with special teachers to teach them how to live decently.

Queensland believes the lost weekends will have benefits far beyond the obvious one of allowing a man or woman to continue to earn a living. The Australian weekend is a precious liberty; the prospect of losing it will, it is believed, be a powerful deterrent. There is also, perhaps, the shame—or at least neighborhood embarrassment—that does not attach itself to a money fine.

Queensland is also going to build motel-style jails, and introduce what it calls "scientific sentencing." This means that no judge or magistrate will sentence an offender without first receiving a full report of his social, mental and employment histories and attitudes, prepared by a trained social worker, calling on information from medical, psychiatric and probation office sources.

Prisoners in for medium or long-term sentences will be taught modern trades in workshops in new jails.

Home by the Night Boat

By ART STOTT

For years this newspaper campaigned for a short ferry run from the tip of Saanich Peninsula to the B.C. mainland. Our arguments seemed sound. It would cut the Victoria-Vancouver boat route to little more than half the distance. It would save time. It could be operated economically. It could use ships specially designed for the service, and they needn't be miniature luxury liners similar to the "Princesses" in operation on the regular triangle run. There was more, but that was the nub of it.

Stott

Throughout our campaign the CPR seemed to be undergoing a period of diminished interest in serving Victoria's travelling public and, at all events, had existing business pretty well sewn up, apart from air traffic.

★ ★ ★

Then the Social Credit government came to power. In the course of time it established the Swartz Bay-Tsawwassen service—and a very good service it is, for most purposes. Those who said it couldn't be done had an explanation for their opinion, and a reasonably logical one. It was possible for the government to establish the system, they said, only because the government could drive the Deas Island tunnel and build the road from Vancouver to the point of departure.

But, like so many developments of recent times, the advantages of the new run involved a sacrifice.

By claiming so much of the traffic, the ferry system deprived the triangle run of business to the extent that the CPR ships moving from the harbor in downtown Vancouver to downtown Victoria were switched elsewhere. And the two cities lost the night boat.

We're inclined, now, to sentimentalize about that night boat. We overlook the frequency with which it made the run either to or from Vancouver with only a handful of passengers. We remember, more clearly, those occasions when it travelled full, with passengers sleeping in the smoking lounge, in chairs in the public saloons, occasionally on the upper deck, back to the stack, and once in a while in the aisles.

★ ★ ★

We recall a full evening's activities either in Victoria or Vancouver and a frantic dash for the midnight boat at either wharf. We have fond memories of a full night's sleep aboard, an excellent breakfast at either end anytime around 7 o'clock and a short walk, past the "pirates" taxi-stand, to work at the office or to appointments in either city.

Those with longer memories still talk of the buffet in the dining room at night. You paid your money—was it 75 cents?—and took your choice of cold cuts and an assortment of delicious supporting fare to the snowy linen of a dining table with its heavy silver.

There was a special glamor to the whole thing. The man who made the last sprint before the gangway was hauled in, feet pounding on the dock, won brief notriety. He invariably had an audience. Once those who had allowed adequate time for departure had put their bags in the stateroom, they came on deck for a last look at the city lights as the ship shuddered and thrashing screws drew it from the dockside. You leaned on the rail, shouting farewells, perhaps, to friends who were seeing you off, velvet dark edging to the lighted swath of wharf lamps, the smell of wet piles heavy in the night.

You came aboard, perhaps, after celebrating the post-game festivities of an inter-city sporting event, or from a big show that had played Vancouver and wasn't coming to Victoria. From this end, you might have run your car into the ship for an early motoring start on a holiday on the mainland. Whatever the occasion, you'd had lots of evening hours before you began your journey—and an assurance of decent sleep unless the strait and the gulf kicked up in heavy storm.

Now, if you go across for a dinner, an evening meeting or a special event, to catch the last plane home at night you have to leave downtown Vancouver about 9:45. If you're travelling by ferry, departure is much earlier. You rush and then you have the drive home from the terminal on the Island.

If you can overlook a couple of points, you think wistfully of the old night boat, the comfort and convenience, even the elegance, of it. The memories swarm into your mind while you're waiting for your plane or to get on the ferry.

★ ★ ★

The points you're inclined to overlook are that you can get a hotel room in Vancouver and fly home first thing in the morning, arriving not much later than the night boat brought you in, and also that to run a night boat a company needs sufficient return to justify the service economically.

Maybe populations have grown sufficiently to guarantee adequate loads, and possibly affluence has increased to the point where the ordinary passenger would pay higher fare and stateroom charges to make the re-establishment of the night boat worthwhile. Under those conditions. Some enterprising operator might be expected to start up the run again. If not—well it was swell in retrospect, and by the law of compensations, for almost every advantage modern times bring, we may reasonably expect some sacrifice.

Destructive Revolution Starts 'Innocently'

By ELIZABETH FORBES

There are two kinds of revolution in Latin America says Rev. Gordon Houser, secretary of Latin America Mission (Canada) Inc. Both affect the lives of the people. One in a destructive way, the other in a way that involves them in a program that benefits "the whole man."

Forbes

Houser said the destructive kind starts in many instances "quite innocently" with a small group of workers going on strike.

★ ★ ★

"The Communists who are everywhere in the country, wait for just this type of mild unrest. They are great opportunists.

"They move in. Take the strike over. Organize to the hilt and turn it into a kind of madness that sweeps everything before it, leads to dictatorship and leaves the people in a worse condition than they were before."

On the other hand, the constructive type of revolution, as organized by the Latin America Mission is geared to people service.

Spearheaded from Costa Rica where mission headquarters has been maintained since 1921, this new approach, now in its 10th year, involves a team of men and women going into a city, town or rural district on invitation and organizing an evangelistic campaign. Not for a few days or a few weeks but for a full year.

★ ★ ★

Objective is to use every available means to match resources to the opportunities. Special efforts are made to reach children, young people, women, students, professional people, laborers, those in hospitals, prisons and other institutions.

Literacy campaigns, youth camps and congresses, choir tours and open-air evangelism all provide ways to reach the people.

When the team leaves at the end of the year, an enthusiastic and dedicated group of people, old and young, are ready to continue the work.

In 1962, a medical-social project was added by the Costa Rican headquarters, for the benefit of the most remote rural communities.

★ ★ ★

This program includes medical and dental services, technical aid to farmers, literacy help, home improvement instruction, children's Bible classes and educational films.

Men and women who head the caravans give generously of their time. Medicines for the most part are donated by organizations of all types in Costa Rica and in other places and by various doctors throughout the country. Other costs are covered through donations to the mission.

Work of the mission in programming "evangelism-in-depth" as it is called, doesn't stop here. There is also serious thought for the future. This centres around an interdenominational seminary where an average of 55 young men and women from churches in all parts of Latin America can be trained at a time, in mission work.

★ ★ ★

"We've had wonderful co-operation from the youth of the country," Gordon Houser says. "They are enthusiastic and dedicated."

Then he tells of street corner sing-ins "they love music and singing," of youth gatherings "not to wave placards and to advocate violence but to speak quietly and sincerely of our work," and of an imaginative blitz in Caracas, Venezuela, "that brought 100 young people together."

★ ★ ★

There plan was to get aboard Caracas buses, pay their money, then stand at the front and give a short talk on the mission. Several stops later, when they had delivered their message to captive audiences, they got off again.

When the blitz was over they had "shown an ability to mobilize their group and to participate in a constructive way."

Much better, Gordon Houser points out "than waving placards, overturning automobiles and breaking windows in senseless demonstrations that have no meaning except destruction" as so many youth groups are doing around the world today.

He and his wife Bobbie have been in the Fraser Valley and the Victoria area, telling the story of their mission's in-depth program. They are now on their way back to Toronto where they maintain the Canadian office of the Latin-American Mission.

EDMONTON WOMEN FROTHING OVER SAMPLES

Trudeau Can Expect Mail From Alberta

EDMONTON (CP) — Laundry detergent containing phosphates was being mailed today to Prime Minister Trudeau by Edmonton women.

A campaign organized to STOP, Save Tomorrow—Oppose Pollution, led to about 100 samples of a detergent being mailed to the prime minister.

The samples were mailed by residents of Village on the Green, a condominium development in the northeast sector of the city. The samples were left at residential doors and turned over by occupants.

A study by a University of Toronto pollution probe committee showed this detergent contained 36.5 per cent phosphate.

Mrs. Heather Granley, STOP organizer, estimated Monday's shipment was about a quarter of the toal amount of detergent mailed in the last week to the prome minister.

Richard Gregory, a spokesman for STOP, said shipments will continue but the amount "depends upon the response to our publicity. I don't know exactly."

"Ladies phone us," Gregory said. "We're a clearing house. We provide contact among women who want to do something."

A member said she organized the collection because she was angry with things being left at her door.

"They put the responsibility on me to dispose of it and I'm disposing of it."

Mrs. Granley said "There has got to be a stop to unsoliciated dumping on our doorsteps of products we wouldn't ordinarily buy, particularly one that the government has banned."

Sask. Moves To Lower Age

REGINA (CP) — Young people would be able to drink liquor legally, marry without parental consent and sign contracts in their own name, all at the age of 19, under a bill given approval in principle Tuesday night in the legislature.

The measure, lowering the age of legal majority in Saskatchewan from 21, drew a few dissenting voices — one by Highways Minister Dave Boldt. It still must get third reading before coming into effect.

Attorney-General D. V. Heald, who introduced the legislation two weeks ago, called the move a milestone in social progress. He said young people now are more aware of social, economic and political realities than in the past.

Boldt broke government ranks and criticized the specific parts of the bill that would lower by two years the age for legal drinking of liquor.

Bank Robbed

WINNIPEG (CP) — Three masked gunmen who apparently hid in the basement before opening-time robbed a north end bank today of an undisclosed amount of cash.

First reports said two employees of the Bank of Montreal branch at Main St. and Bannerman Ave. were confronted by the gunmen as they went to the basement vault before 9:30 a.m.

They were forced upstairs and while the remaining staff was held at gunpoint, bank employees were ordered to open a vault.

The gunmen, wearing blue ski masks over their faces, escaped on foot.

Horses Sold

CALGARY (CP) — The auctioneers worked hard to get bids from a capacity crowd at the Calgary Stampede spring horse sale Tuesday night.

The sale's second evening session saw 26 head sold for $8,090 or an average of about $310. The top sale of the evening and of the sale was a two-year-old purebred Aragian mare bought from T. M. Allen Jr. of Taber. The buyer was Mary Mackay of Turner Valley.

Tax Tripled

REGINA (CP) — The 10-cent-an-acre tax levied on CP Rail, the CNR and the Hudson's Bay Co. for Saskatchewan mineral rights will be tripled under proposed legislation. The changes will mean an increase of about $1,800,000 a year in provincial revenue. CP Rail holds about 2,800,000 acres, CN about 3,000,000 and Hudson's Bay about 2,300,000.

Magazine Propaganda

EDMONTON (CP) — Lou Hyndman (PC — Edmonton West) Tuesday said in the legislature the government magazine Alberta — Land for Living, is "pretty thinly-disguised" propaganda. He also complained about its cost — $185,000 for two issues.

MANAGEMENT MEMO

Human Resources Key to Success

(Written for the Times by Don Anderson of Kates, Peat, Marwick and Co.)

In most companies the key to success lies in the area of its human resources. Their effectiveness depends on three principal factors. The first is the system within which they work — the environment for success. Do they have the necessary mental and physical equipment to make them effective — an organizational structure which includes up-to-date machines and systems, and continuing training.

The second is the interrelationships between people — are they tense and uncommunicative — do people play games with each other at company expense — do communications, recommendations, directives and responses flow effectively or do they always seem to get fouled up.

The third is the relationships between the company and the individual — is he given fair remuneration, adequate protection against disability and provision for his needs at retirement. Is he given adequate motivation — praise when he does well, blame when he goofs. Does he know where he stands and where he is going.

But all this is going to be impossible to achieve unless the company itself knows where it wants to go. It is astonishing how many companies do not know what their goals are.

FRUSTRATING

Frequently one sits down with top management to wrestle with a specific problem, only to find that the solution depended on the philosophy of the company which in turn naturally depends on its objectives. In the majority of cases any attempt to discover these objectives will prove frustrating.

So far the term "objective" has been used interchangeably with the term "goal" but it would be helpful to make a distinction. In the common accepted language of the field, the term "goal" relates to something specific which is to be accomplished, such as "my goal is to be in a certain city one day each week for the next month." A little planning and a little money spent on transportation and your goal will be realized.

On the other hand, the term "objective" relates to something more directional, more general, less attainable in a specific sense. One might say "my objective is to make more money" or "the company's objective is to stress quality over quantity while increasing profitability." Any movement in the direction of earning more money is said to be the achievement of one's objectives. And any general movement in the direction of quality and profitability is the achievement of the company's objective.

SPECIFIC GOALS

Obviously objectives have to be translated into specific goals to serve as a basis for planning.

But the process of translation of objectives into goals into programs is one which is not well understood by decision makers. Briefly, it involves the following steps:

First, the objectives must be proposed, tested, examined and then accepted.

Second, a number of programs must be thought up which might be harmonious with the objectives.

Third, an appraisal must be made of each program. What would it accomplish? What would be its advantages and disadvantages? What would it cost? What would it contribute to the over-all objectives.

Fourth, the various programs must be compared to determine which have the best payoff. They are then ranked as to priority.

Fifth, an action plan must be agreed on to implement the programs which have been chosen, with appropriate timetables. Specific targets and goals must be established for these programs.

Sixth, resources must be allocated to meet the requirements of the programs.

Seventh, progress must be reviewed to see that goals are being met. Finally, over-all company practices must be reviewed to see that they harmonize with the basic objectives. Corrective action is taken where necessary.

And this is where human resource management fits in. Manpower and organizational requirements of the programs are compared with existing situations and gaps are identified.

MANY OPTIONS

In no two cases will this process be the same. A great deal depends naturally on where they company is now. What are its product lines, production capacity, true markets? What are the factors that limit the corporation's actions? And how readily can these constraints be altered by decisions within the company's power?

A company usually has many more options open to it than its management is willing to entertain. In simple language, the company may be in a rut, bound by tradition, human stubborness, lack of imagination, sacred cows, evasion of responsibility. Failure to either foresee or plan the future.

But the challenge of the future lies upon us all. Will we take the back seat and let other, more imaginative people, perhaps in other countries, take over the markets of the future? Or will we put our heads together and plan and make sure we know where we are going? This is the manpower problem.

Nippon Steel

The new Japanese steel company, Nippon Steel Corp., expects to become the world's leading producer of crude steel by next year.

Formed March 31 by the union of Yawata Iron and Steel Co. and Fuji Iron and Steel Co. Nippon Steel looks to overtake U.S. Steel, which last year produced 31.5 million tons, compared with 24.36 million tons by British Steel Corp., 19.74 million tons by Bethlehem and 29 million by Yawata and Fuji combined.

Nippon said it plans to increase production, while U.S. Steel does not plan to expand production facilities this year.

Hickory Farms

A group of businessmen in Great Falls, Mont., have purchased the Canadian franchise division of Hickory Farms of Ohio, a national system of specialty food stores.

Hickory Farms has franchised more than 140 locally-owned stores throughout the U.S.

All franchising and store operations in Canada will be directed by the new company. The first store is scheduled to open April 29 in Toronto, and there are plans to open more than 30 stores in Canada within five years.

Concorde

Enquiries have been made by a major mining company into taking an interest in the San Juan River property of Concorde Explorations Ltd. upstream from Port Renfrew.

Weather and road conditions during the winter halted the company's surface program there, and exploration attention has been redirected to a gold-silver prospect on Herbert Inlet, a few miles north of Tofino, where old workings have been pumped and a camp set up.

Geological mapping and sampling also took place and limited diamond drilling was recommended.

Benson, Hedges

Benson and Hedges Canada Ltd., has signed an agreement to purchase for an undisclosed amount all the capital stock of Formosa Holdings Ltd.

The major property of Formosa Holdings Ltd. is its wholly-owned subsidiary, Formosa Spring Brewery.

Pine Point

Pine Point Mines Ltd. had net earnings in the first quarter of 1970 of $6.37 million or $1.41 per share, compared with $3.8 million or 85 cents per share for the same period last year.

President D. D. Morris warned shareholders that future net earnings and dividends could be cut by 28 per cent if the federal government adopts its white paper tax proposals.

Production for the first three months of this year amounted to 31,180 tons of lead concentrates and 99,480 tons of zinc concentrates obtained from treating 834,000 tons of ore averaging 3.2 per cent lead and 7.3 per cent zinc.

New Brunswick Paper Company In Production

NACKAWIC, N.B. (CP) — Production of corrugating medium has started at the $72,000,000 St. Anne Nackawic Pulp and Paper Co. Ltd. mill in this new community 40 miles north of Fredericton.

The medium is used for making cardboard boxes. When in full operation the mill will daily produce 850 tons of this medium and bleached kraft pulp for magazines and fine paper. Major markets will be Britain and Europe and eventually, officials hope, the United States.

The mill provides 400 jobs with wages averaging about $8,000 a year. About 900 were employed in the peak construction period. Use of New Brunswick hardwoods supplied by a subsidiary, farmers and woodlot owners will also make approximately 1,000 jobs available out side the plant.

Sun Income, Circulation, Ads, Up

VANCOUVER (CP) — Net income of Sun Publishing Company Ltd. for 1969 was $2.6 million, up $385,444 from 1968. C. B. Delbridge, chairman of the board, said in his annual report to shareholders.

The company publishes the evening Sun for Pacific Press Ltd., which produces the Sun and the morning Province.

The report said the company's main source or revenue "continues to be derived from our 50 per cent interest in Pacific Press."

"We received dividends from this source of $672,000 and our share of the undistributed equity of the company amounted to $1.19 million for the year, an increase of $184,418 in total over 1968."

Profits from the sale of securities amounted to $346,535.

The report said the Sun "achieved all-time records in both advertising space and circulation in 1969."

Advertising space of 37 million lines exceeded 1968 levels by 7.4 per cent.

"A record net paid circulation of 261,234 was reached in the week ended Nov. 1, 1969."

In a passing reference to a continuing labor dispute which resulted in Pacific Press suspending production of the Sun and the Province Feb. 15 the report said:

"Circulation growth in the last quarter, however, was reduced by production slowdowns resulting from labor negotiations."

Trudeau Discounts Move to Cut Rates

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau said Tuesday that the government is not considering asking the Bank of Canada to take a lead in reduction of interest rates.

He was replying in the Commons to George Hees (PC —Prince Edward-Hastings) who said a reduction in rates would stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment, which he described as Canada's No. 1 problem.

The automobile—is pride of ownership slowly dying?

Mercedes-Benz 280S. Approximately $7,181*. Other models from $5,185* to $31,100*.

Mercedes-Benz examines the relationship of man to his automobile. Offers a few facts, and a conclusion.

WILL most people eventually buy whatever car meets their particular needs most exactly, at the lowest cost per mile?

Undoubtedly, this is a growing trend. As a man's discretionary income grows, he is no longer inclined to throw most of it into a bigger home and a more expensive car — as the burgeoning sales of boats, snowmobiles, skis and travel tickets testify.

Mercedes-Benz will probably not suffer from this trend. Indications are that many Mercedes-Benz owners buy the car not because it is in their price bracket but because it is skilfully engineered and carefully put together. Because it is tasteful and functional.

Eighty-five per cent of Mercedes-Benz owners recently surveyed own watches which cost at least $100. Our conjecture is that this kind of man buys a good watch because he knows it is precisely made and will last a long time. And he feels it is in good taste. Whether other people know it is an expensive watch is irrelevant: so is the fact that a cheaper way of telling the time would be to buy a $10 watch every year.

We believe that many Mercedes-Benz owners fall into this psychological type.

They get satisfaction from feeling an exact response to the merest flick of the wheel, as compared to the vague reaction of normal power steering.

They derive feelings of confidence and serenity from sitting in a seat that fits snugly and offers firm support because orthopedic surgeons helped design it — a seat that feels as though it belongs in a car rather than in a club or a living room.

They gain satisfaction from living with automobile styling that combines function and good taste in time-defying fashion. (The body of the 280S shown above was introduced in 1967: it looks undated today and will, we believe, continue to do so.)

Our conclusion: the purchase of a fine automobile such as the Mercedes-Benz will become passé only when man loses his aesthetic sense.

Super Bargain for School Pool

RICHMOND (CP) — A plastic swimming pool that costs only a fraction of cement ones and can be used for everything but diving is attracting attention from schools hampered by small budgets.

The pool, which comes complete with steel side supports and plywood outer walls and a chlorinization system, costs $6,000 and is used at Mitchell elementary school in this Vancouver suburb for a multi-purpose swimming program.

★ ★ ★

Pre-schoolers come for swimming lessons early in the afternoon and the depth of the 28-by-16 foot pool is lowered to two feet. A foot of water is added for children in lower grades who swim before supper.

"In the evening, older students come and up goes the level, and from eight to nine o'clock we get adults and up goes the level to four feet," said Ernest Wilmink, Richmond recreation program co-ordinator.

"We just keep adding water. If we wanted to move it, two men could take it down in one day and put it up in another."

Because the pool can easily be heated to 100 degrees fahrenheit, nearby Richmond General Hospital uses it for therapeutic heat treatment of patients with muscle and bone problems.

★ ★ ★

"Swimming pools in some schools cost up to $500,000—this one has to be a super-bargain," said Mr. Wilmink. It was designed by a Vancouver metal products firm, based on one used in United States cities.

Pupils Encouraged To Express Themselves

TORONTO (CP) — Art at school used to come in a formal session every second Friday when you copied the teacher's drawing and relaxed by "talking to your neighbor, quietly."

In Ontario schools now, formal rigid lessons are being replaced by sessions where pupils are encouraged to express themselves more freely.

This means that art work can start any time and any one of 100 different materials can be used: paper cups, styrofoam, toothpicks, doctors' tongue depressers.

The children don smocks and sprawl on the floor with big brushes and big pieces of paper. Chatting is encouraged, not punished.

"When I went to school the teacher did the drawing first and put it up at the front," recalls Ada Warren, a public school principal. "If you didn't do your picture her way, the work ended up in the wastebasket and you ended up in tears."

Today teachers stay in the background and offer instruction when the child seems ready. Sometimes a youngster will bring a picture of a house and say it looks crooked. That tells the teacher the child is ready for a lesson on perspective.

Teachers are encouraged to try unusual materials. At Miss Warren's school they have made beads out of cornstarch dough, ear-rings from papier mache and bracelets of plastic lacing.

"I've seen children doing dandy pictures on window blinds, pieces of wood and even dried mushrooms," Miss Warren said.

MARQUESS DIES AT 50

LONDON (AP) — The Marquess of Milford Haven, 50, cousin of Queen Elizabeth, died Tuesday night after collapsing at the Liverpool Street railway terminus.

First aid was given for the Marquess, who was best man at the wedding of Pince Philip and the then Princess Elizabeth, until an ambulance arrived to take him to hospital.

A message reporting his death was sent from Buckingham Palace to the Queen and Prince Philip at Brisbane where they are continuing their royal tour of Australia.

Accident Kills 17

MAROBA (Reuters) — At least 17 persons were killed and eight injured when a truck hit a culvert wall and overshot the road near this north Idian Uttar Pradesh state town Tuesday. Police said the truck was carrying laborers to work.

AUDITED PAID CIRCULATION
ABC

The Hallmark of Circulation Integrity

In the same way that STERLING on silver signifies a standard of known value, so is this A.B.C. emblem a symbol of FACTS about the circulation of newspapers and periodicals. It is the emblem of membership in the Audit Bureau of Circulations* and is assurance to advertisers that the circulations of member publications are measured, audited and reported in accordance with the rigid standards that have been mutually approved and adopted by advertisers and publishers. Here's why our membership in the A.B.C. is important to our advertisers and ourselves: At regular intervals one of the Bureau's large staff of experienced circulation auditors makes a thorough inspection and audit of our circulation records. The results of this exacting audit show: how much circulation we have; where it goes; how it was obtained; and many other FACTS that advertisers need as a sound basis for their advertising investments. This audited information is published by the Bureau in easy-to-read A.B.C. reports which are available to our advertisers on request.

*The Audit Bureau of Circulations, of which this newspaper is a member, is a cooperative, nonprofit association of nearly 4,000 advertisers, advertising agencies and publishers. Organized in 1914, A.B.C. brought order out of advertising chaos by establishing: A definition for paid circulation; rules and standards for auditing and reporting the circulations of newspapers and periodicals.

A.B.C. REPORTS—FACTS AS A BASIC MEASURE OF ADVERTISING VALUE

INTRODUCING THE EXECUTIVE JET.™

The conveniences of the office.

We know there's no place to work like your office. Still, we think our new Executive Jet can sort of act as your office away from the office while flying across Canada. It has some of the conveniences of your office, plus some you may wish you had in your office.

So next time you're planning a flight within Canada, make sure it's on one of our many regularly scheduled Executive Jet flights.

And you'll get the conveniences of your office at no extra charge.

If you'd rather work than play.

Some men aren't happy unless they're working.

So we've put DeJur dictating equipment on all Executive Jet flights. Now, when that great business idea suddenly comes to you at 30,000 feet, you'll be able to record it instead of forgetting it.

Perhaps you have some important memos to get out. Just dictate them into one of our recorders and drop the tape off at our airport ticket counter when you land. Office Overload will type a first draft and send it ahead to your office. That way, your secretary will have things up-to-date when you get back.

Financial newspapers to show you how much money you could have made.

Or how much money you saved by not investing in the last tip your barber gave you.

All Executive Jets now carry most major financial newspapers from the Wall Street Journal to the Financial Post.

And if that's not enough to keep you financially informed, read the brief, up-to-the-minute resume of marketing/financial information that is passed around aboard every Executive Jet. (The resume is revised throughout the day. So you're never behind the times.)

Publications that might be found in your office. But not necessarily in your home.

Our survey has shown that a great many executives enjoy browsing through men's magazines in their leisure office hours. So, with the executive's pleasure in mind, we've made Playboy magazine available on all Executive Jets.

We also carry all major magazines that are directed to today's businessman. Magazines like Fortune, Harvard Business Review, and Executive are just a few.

Our stewardesses don't look like stewardesses.

For one thing, our stewardesses don't wear standard uniforms. They wear what we call "non-uniforms." Our non-uniform fashions are supplied to us by Canada's best known department store. So you know they're contemporary.

For instance, instead of uniforms that make stewardesses look like they're in the army, you'll see our girls in pantsuits, maxi-coats and bell bottoms.

And as fashions and seasons change, so will our stewardesses' dress. That way, you'll never get tired of looking at them.

Our stewardesses also have a way of making you feel comfortable throughout your flight. They're courteous, friendly, and tuned to the needs of the business flyer.

Leave your business troubles behind.

Our new Executive Jet can even help a man forget about business.

The atmosphere on board is always relaxed and informal. The food is good. The distractions plentiful. And the people on board are the kind of people a business flyer can talk to. They're mostly other business flyers.

The comforts of home.

We know there's no place like home. Still, we think our new Executive Jet can sort of act as your home away from home while flying across Canada.

It has some of the comforts you have at home, plus some you may wish you had at home.

The better treatment starts on the ground.

Unless you board an Executive Jet in a good mood, you may not be in the mood to enjoy all the good things we've put aboard.

So we've taken special care to assure you a pleasant boarding experience. We've trained our ground personnel in the fastest methods of confirming reservations and checking baggage.

It may seem like a small thing but we know from experience that if a flight is to be totally pleasant, it has to get off to a good start.

Home cooked meals.

The food you get aboard every Executive Jet is prepared by tender, loving hands. Hands that have been trained by the best Continental and Canadian masters around.

And the meat and fowl served aboard are the finest quality money can buy. So you know that the meals you get on every Executive Jet are as good as the ones you get at home.

Some people even think they're a little better.

More publications than you'll find around the house.

Variety is the spice of reading.

And the reading material on every Executive Jet is varied enough to please almost anyone's taste. We have specialty magazines for businessmen. We have current issues of Newsweek and Time for those who are still trying to understand the world.

You can even pick from top-selling fiction and non-fiction books.

Games people play.

The games we have aboard are not for kids.

They're sophisticated games. The kind of games that can keep you engaged for hours.

For instance, Instant Insanity. Here's a puzzle that can reduce a sophisticated executive to a babbling child in twenty minutes.

Soma is another game that can help the executive relax and forget about business for a while.

Next time you fly with us, just tell the stewardess you're in the mood to play games.

She'll understand.

Beer: We give you a choice.

A man shouldn't have to drink the same old brew every time. So we let you choose between several of the finest Canadian beers on the market.

Or you can enjoy one of our fine imported wines.

Women: Find happiness on the Executive Jet.

Can a woman really find happiness aboard an Executive Jet?

We think so. After all, it's comfortable for anyone; man, woman, or child.

The women won't have to dictate or read Fortune to have fun, either. There are dozens of other things to do.

And the men who fly on the Executive Jet are the kind that women enjoy talking to. They're smart men.

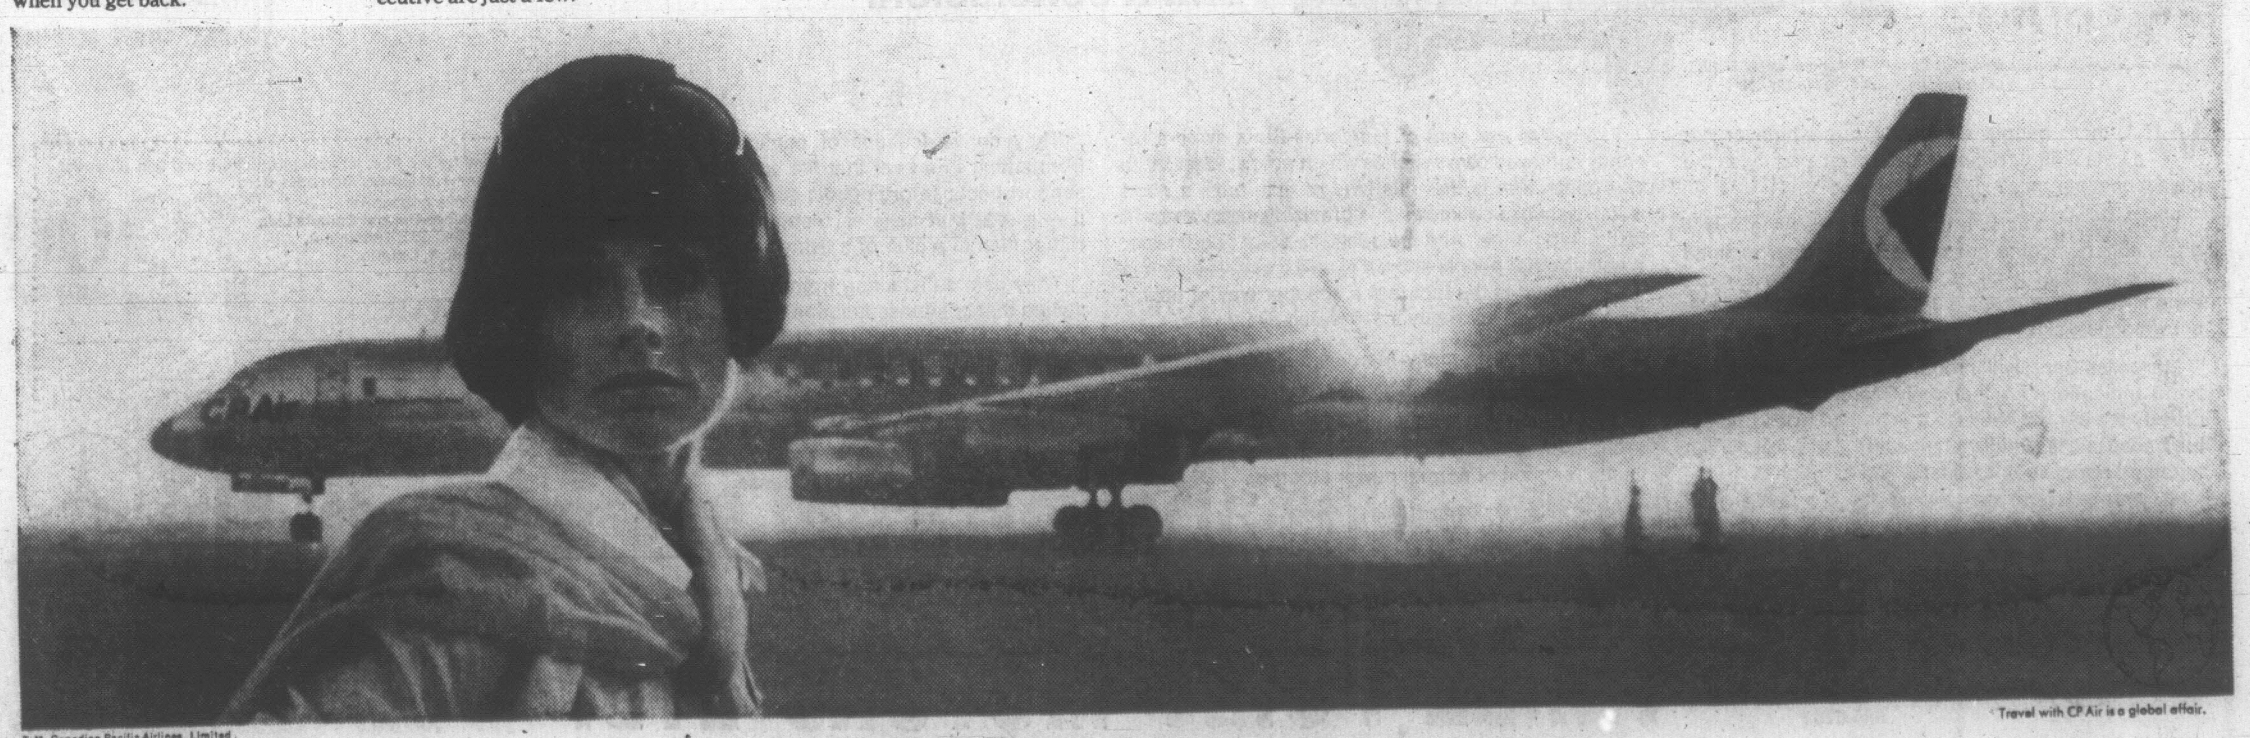

Aware men.

They're MEN.

So feel welcome, ladies. You'll be in good company.

Reading Easier Using Capitals

TIMMINS, Ont. (CP) — A new method of teaching children to read is meeting with success in Joseph H. Kennedy public school at Matheson, a small Northern Ontario community about 45 miles east of here.

Principal Frank Kinsella said he feels the new method of using only upper-case letters for reading and writing practice is a major breakthrough in this area of learning.

From September to December, 1969, the group that was having difficulty—approximately seven Grade 1 pupils—managed to read only 14 pages in a pre-primer work. At an average of one new word per page, their progress was slow.

★ ★ ★

Now, using the method which has been in use since Christmas, they have finished the pre-primer, the primer, and now are well into the Grade 1 reader.

Mr. Kinsella said the system operates on the theory that when children start writing at home, most of them begin printing in capital letters. This requires less writing-muscle co-ordination, which could be a cause of frustration for the child who cannot form his lower-case letters well.

Beginning in January, all pre-primer readers were changed. Texts were typed with a machine which types only in capital letters. The stories that were typed were pasted into the texts, under the pictures.

★ ★ ★

"Once the door was unlocked, and they started to read, their enthusiasm just snowballed," said Mr. Kinsella.

He said that he can foresee no problem in the change required later to lower-case letters. The pupils have been encouraged by their success with the capital letters; so unlocking the mystery of lower-case letters now will be an exciting challenge.

Report Urges Help for Debtor in Trouble

TORONTO (CP) — Sketchy consumer credit protection is driving poor families deeper into debt and poverty, a two-year study by the Canadian Welfare Council has concluded.

The report surveyed 235 families in Hamilton with incomes ranging from $1,000 to $9,500. It found that one-quarter of them had debts of more than one-quarter of their gross annual income.

●

Debt-ridden families are not confined to one income level, the report says, but the impact of debt can be disastrous on the family with a margin income.

The study revealed the families tended to rent instead of own their homes and paid more for housing than debt-free families.

●

More than 54 per cent had difficulty in meeting monthly debt repayments. Only a few knew debt-counselling services exist. At least 25 per cent had been sued for debt, some as often as 12 times in five years.

The council's report calls for creation of government agencies to enforce legislation and help the debtor in trouble.

After studying the report, William White, an official of the Metropolitan Toronto Family Service Association, said poor people should be able to declare personal bankruptcy with greater ease.

"If families overburdened with debt could declare a bankruptcy, merchants would be more careful about who they gave credit to.

●

"You've got deprivation and poverty on one hand and credit being shoved down their throats from every side."

Credit adds to poverty, said White, because the cost of a credit purchase is often double that of a cash sale.

U.S. Army Spies On Dissenters

By PETER OSNOS

WASHINGTON (WP)—The U.S. army is continuing its nation-wide surveillance of civilian dissenters despite its declared intention of cutting back, the American Civil Liberties Union has charged.

With a hearing on the issue set in U.S. District Court here for April 22, the ACLU has filed papers which maintain the army's willingness to close down its Ft. Holabird, Md., "computerized data bank" on the political activities of civilians masks the fact such information is still being collected and stored elsewhere.

Among the locations listed by the Civil Liberties group are a microfilm file kept by the Counter-Intelligence Analysis Division of the Army Assistant Chief of Staff for Intelligence and a "domestic intelligence file" maintained by the Continental Army Command at Ft. Monroe, Va.

In addition, the court papers include letters from top army officials conceding "spot reports" are still gathered by military intelligence agents on civilian activities with "a high potential for violence and disorder."

The ACLU is challenging the constitutionality of the army's surveillance of "lawful" civilian political activity in a suit filed here in February and set for a preliminary hearing later this month.

Plaintiffs in the action, who contend the army has been watching them, include the Rev. Albert Cleage, a black minister from Detriot; Conrad Lynn, a black lawyer from New York, and Arlo Tatum of the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors.

Suit Prompted by Article

The information contained in the ACLU's latest brief is based, according to sources in the group, on private contacts with military intelligence officials and the army's own public statements.

Army spokesmen have refused to comment on the disclosures, other than by referring reporters to statements of high Pentagon officials, which inadvertently support many of the ACLU's contentions.

The ACLU suit and at least 50 congressional inquiries to the Pentagon were prompted by an article in February issue of the Washington Monthly written by a former army intelligence officer who described the army's means of keeping track of civilian dissenters.

In response to the congressmen, Army General Counsel Robert Jordan wrote on Feb. 24 that army activities in the "civil sector" consisted of gauging the potential for civil disturbances where the army might be called out.

"There have been some activities which have been undertaken in the civil disturbance field," Jordan wrote, "which after review have been determined to be beyond the army's mission requirements."

The general counsel singled out for withdrawal and destruction, "an identification list which included the names and descriptions of individuals who might be involved in civil disturbances."

This was described in the Washington Monthly article, written by Christopher Pyle, as "The Blacklist"—"an encyclopedia of profiles of individuals and organizers who in the opinion of its compilers, 'might cause trouble for the army'."

In addition, Jordan said, it had been decided to discontinue the computerized data bank at U.S. Army Intelligence Command Headquarters at Ft. Holabird pertaining to information about "potential incidents" and the individuals who might be involved.

Clergy Watched by Army Agents

According to Pyle, some of the organizations the army has been keeping an eye on are the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Clergy and Laymen Against the War in Vietnam, the American Civil Liberties Union, Women's Strike for Peace and the NAACP.

The army acknowledged that when Pyle's article first appeared there were 1,000 agents across the country whose function besides carrying out security checks of army and governmental personnel was to gather material for these "spot reports" on civil activities.

Thaddeus R. Beal, Undersecretary of the Army, said that reporting of these incidents "is now limited to (those) where there is a high potential for violence and disorder growing beyond the capability of state and local police and the National Guard to control."

An army spokesman said the number of "spot reports" has vastly decreased recently from what it once was.

The ACLU, however, contends in its brief, filed last week, the army is still keeping too close an eye on the political activities of private citizens.

The civil liberties group argues army spokesmen misled the congressmen because they failed to report the continuing operation of the Continental Army Command's nationwide data bank, or that of its numerous national regional data centres maintained by each stateside army command and each military intelligence group.

Such files, which the ACLU claims duplicate the information kept in the forsaken computer, are kept by the First, Third, Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Armies and the military district of Washington.

Also, the group asserts, files are kept by the 108th, 109th, 111th, 112th, 113th, 115th and 116th Military Intelligence Groups and the 710th Military Intelligence Detachment.

Finally, the ACLU charges the army has told members of the military intelligence groups that the decision to close down the Ft. Holabird operation would not affect their activities.

B.C. Copper Next Target

OTTAWA (CP) — Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said Tuesday he is unhappy with the two-price system for Canadian copper that has developed in the government's war on inflation.

"I'm sad about the whole thing," Pepin told reporters after a department spokesman announced the government's refusal to permit Noranda Mines Ltd. to increase the domestic price for copper.

Controls announced by the trade minister recently require Canadian copper producers to provide 23,500 tons a month at 59 cents a pound for the domestic market — well below the world price which reached 85 cents this week. The domestic quota is close to 50 per cent of Canadian output.

Pepin said the policy is chafing producers and at the same time has not brought satisfaction to manufacturers who are demanding a bigger share of Canadian output at the bargain rate. Allotments are based on consumption in the first part of 1969.

B.C. PRODUCERS NEXT?

The trade minister said that only a few copper producers in British Columbia remain uncovered by the policy but there now is pressure to extend controls to them as well.

"When that happens we'll have unanimity of discontent," he said.

He said he sees danger that export of copper products could develop on an uneconomic basis and that overextended manufacturers could face a crisis as the inflation priority recedes and they are required to pay world prices for raw materials.

There is also the danger, he said, that mining companies would invest money outside Canada and curtail exploration and development activities.

MAY BE EXTENDED

As well, export controls in future might have to be extended to cover production of such metals as aluminum.

The Aluminum Co. of Canada Monday raised its world price for primary aluminum ingot by half a cent a pound to 28 cents in U.S. funds. Mr. Pepin said the company may eventually want to raise the Canadian price beyond the present 29.5 cents a pound and the government may then have to intervene to ask for proof that such an increase in needed.

Pepin said two or three other copper producers have requested permission to raise their domestic prices but have been refused. The government's control over the producers lies in its power to licence exports.

"The Import-Export Act is in my hands and I was asked to use it as my contribution against inflation," Pepin said.

Land Claim Tests Seen By Indians

TORONTO (CP)—Canada's 450,000 Indian, Eskimo and Metis have obtained an outline of broken treaties and ignored aboriginal rights in a legal report released Monday that is expected to become the basis for court cases across Canada.

Walter Deiter, president of the National Indian Brotherhood, said Tuesday 85 per cent of the land in the country is involved—through unfulfilled treaties in some areas and no treaties at all in others.

The National Indian Brotherhood has "dozens" of claims before it, he said in an interview, and the brotherhood is waiting to hear from local bands and provincial organizations to set priorities on which claims to take to court in test cases..

★ ★ ★

The 265-page report was commissioned by the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada and the National Indian Brotherhood. It was prepared by a team of lawyers, law professors and consultants headed by Dean R. St. John Mcdonald of the University of Toronto's law faculty.

Calgary oil millionaire Eric Harvie, 78, made an undisclosed grant from the Harvie Foundation to pay for the study.

The report says half Canada's Indians entered into treaty at the request of the Crown. The other half, including Eskimos in the Yukon and Indians in British Columbia and the Maritimes, were never given that opportunity.

★ ★ ★

"This raises significant questions about the legal correctness of dealings with land in the remaining areas," the report says. "If a legal remedy exists for non-treaty areas now in non Indian ownership, it could only be a claim for compensation. Such a claim has not, to date, been pursued in our courts."

Even where treaties were made, the report says, "certain treaty promises have been broken by the federal government, notably in relation to hunting and fishing rights."

"Our courts have held that the federal government can override treaty promises by legislation. The question whether such legal deprivation of special rights can give rise to a claim for compensation is a matter that has not been pursued in our courts."

RAILS IMPOSE PIGGYBACK EMBARGO

NEW YORK (AP) — Wildcat strikes by truck drivers in scattered cities have caused increased layoffs and an embargo on some piggyback freight rail shipments to Chicago. But an air traffic controllers strike was reported virtually ended.

The trucker strikers were blamed by nine railways for an embargo they imposed today on piggyback frieght shipments to many Chicago companies. However, a Chicago Teamsters union official termed the embargo an attempt by the railways to help the trucking industry break the truckers' walkout.

Layoffs due to the walkout, already in the thousands, were reported increasing in industries which lacked parts or were plagued by jammed warehouses.

Cities hit by the trucker strikes include Chicago, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Detroit, Cleveland, Akron, Ohio, and Cherryville, N.C.

Riel Goes On Stamp

OTTAWA (CP) — A six-cent stamp honoring Louis Riel will be issued June 19, the 100th anniversary of the year in which the Metis leader reached the appex of his career, the post office department announced today.

The stamp, designed by Reinhard Derreth of Vancouver, will be red and blue showing a full face, head and shoulders portrait of Riel with the word Canada across the top. It will be vertical in format about an inch wide and an inch and a half tall.

Riel was born in St. Boniface in 1844 and rose to prominence during the Red River Uprising of 1896-70 when he became president of the Council of Assiniboia, the provisional government which negotiated the area's entry into Confederation as the province of Manitoba.

He was banished from the country in 1875 for five years but returned in 1884 to lead the Northwest Rebellion. Tried for treason, Riel was convicted at Regina and hanged Nov. 16, 1885.

The post office will print 34,000,000 of the commemorative issue.

Man Committed

MONTREAL (CP) — Pierre Marcil, a 26-year-old tinsmith, was committed Tuesday to stand trial on a charge of conspiracy to kidnap the Israeli trade commissioner in February. Another man, Jacques Lanctot, 25, is still being sought in connection with the alleged plot to kidnap the commissioner, Moise Golan.

Deportation Evidence Puzzles Prober

VANCOUVER (CP) — County Court Judge E. J. C. Stewart, saying he's puzzled by some of the evidence, Tuesday ended a special federal hearing into the Jan. 25 deportation of three U.S. army deserters.

The judge, the lone inquiry commissioner, is to send his report to Ottawa.

The three Californians were escorted to the U.S. at the Huntingdon, B.C., border crossing by RCMP and a customs official and were turned over to the U.S. Navy Shore Patrol at Sumas, Wash.

RCMP testified they took the three to the border at the request of K. A. Smith, a Canadian immigration officer. He denied it and told the inquiry he considered the case entirely "an RCMP affair."

Commission counsel Allan McEachern of Vancouver suggested Tuesday the case may be "a straight question of misunderstanding between the RCMP and immigration, although I don't say that to exonerate both groups."

MADE ESCAPE

The three escaped from the Shore Patrol at Mount Vernon, Wash. One, John Kreeger, 22, of Vallejo, Calif., returned to Canada. His complaints sparked the public hearings.

Don Rosenbloom, counsel for Kreeger, said the Americans were subjected to unlawful arrest and imprisonment by the RCMP and Mr. Smith illegally directed their deportation.

Charles Leonard, 18, of Chico, Calif., was recaptured and taken to Ft. Ord, Calif. Whereabouts of the third, Earl Hockette, 21, of Santa Cruz, Calif., are not known.

Mr. McEachern accused Mr. Smith of improper conduct, in not questioning the RCMP's action in escorting the three to the border.

He took the RCMP to task, saying the "whole thing might have been avoided" if RCMP had allowed the three free use of police telephones while at the RCMP's Chilliwack subdivision office.

SEARCH UNAUTHORIZED

In addition, he said, a search of the three by RCMP in that office was not authorized by law. However, no harm had been intended and the three had not objected.

William A. Craig, RCMP counsel, said RCMP had not considered the three under arrest; the RCMP had assisted after Mr. Smith had determined what would be done with the three.

E. M. Russell, counsel for the immigration department, said Mr. Smith's only part was to interview the three. He hadn't ordered them deported and was "an innocent victim of a situation created by the RCMP."

Concluded Judge Stewart; after seven days of testimony:

"It should be a simple matter but there are still some questions which puzzle me."

Sutherland was elected honorary president. Beland Honderich of Toronto Star was re-elected first vice-president and Gabriel Gilbert of Quebec Le Soleil was chosen second vice-president.

WHERE ARE THE FIRST 30?

Another Otter Colony Urged

A suggestion that 30 sea otters, to be obtained from Alaska this summer, be releasel in coastal waters between Port Renfrew and Bamfield was made today by naturalist Freeman King.

The 50-mile coast with its life-saving trail, along with Long Beach and the Effingham Islands in Barkley Sound, will become a national park this month.

King said the otters would provide an added attraction for hikers and outdoorsmen walking the wilderness trail between Port Renfrew and Bamfield.

"The habitat there appears to be suitable for otters," he said. "There are plenty of kelp beds, rocky shelves and caves."

He also felt the animals would be well protected under the watchful eyes of hikers and the Carmanagh lighthouse keeper.

The B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch is working with Alaska for the transfer of the sea otters from Amchitka Island in the Aleutians — site of underground nuclear tests.

James Hatter, director of the B.C. Wildlife branch, said today no decision has been made as to where the fur-bearing mammals would be released.

Sea otters, exterminated in B.C. waters at the turn of the century, were reintroduced to coastal waters last summer.

Thirty were released in an isolated place near Nootka Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Since then, however, none have been seen.

PWA Prepared To Join Triangle Route

Air Canada plans to abandon its 33-year-old Victoria-Seattle service and offer new service to the mainland in conjunction with Pacific Western Airlines, a company spokesman said today.

An announcement here by Air Canada regional sales manager William Garven and PWA executive manager of sales and traffic Alexander Wellburn, both of Vancouver, confirmed that PWA has made application to the Canadian Transport Commission to participate in the Victoria-Vancouver-Seattle passenger service.

If the application is approved — August at the earliest and likely September — Pacific Western would begin flying the Vancouver-Victoria-Seattle route with four return trips per day using Convair 640 turbojets, a 50-passenger aircraft comparable with the Viscount now making three flights daily for Air Canada.

Air Canada would withdraw from the Victoria-Seattle leg of its service.

Approval of the CTC and the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board is necessary.

Air Canada said the required legal notices would be published Thursday and that interested parties would have the opportunity to approve or oppose with 30 days. The CTC air services committee has the option of holding public hearings into the application.

EIGHT DAILY

Air Canada would continue to fly eight trips daily between Victoria and Vancouver and one non-stop Victoria-Calgary flight daily.

The government-owned carrier said it had agreed to the PWA application after being satisfied that standard of service would continue or improve.

The bid is made under authority of federal government policy broadening regional air service, which was described last August by Transport Minister Donald Jamieson.

PWA ranks as Canada's third airline, after Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines. It handles the second largest total of air freight and logs flights over 11,000 route miles in B.C., Alberta and the Northwest Territories. It also flies considerable overseas charter mileage.

There will be no change in the fare schedule, Wellburn said.

Stan Mooney, Air Canada district sales manager, said about 125,000 passengers a year are boarded at Victoria.

Garven said Air Canada still proposes bringing in DC-9 jet aircraft for the Victoria-Vancouver and Victoria-Calgary service, but Wellburn said PWA does not expect to match this with its own Boeing 737 jets, which are of comparable size.

TENNIS SERVED UP

For the first time, Saanich will provide tennis instruction for adults.

The instruction will start April 30 and will be offered every Thursday evening and Saturday morning for six weeks.

Registration will take place at Reynolds Park, Reynolds Road and Cedar Hill Cross Road, from 6 to 7:30 p.m. this Monday and Wednesday. Timetables will be available on registration.

It's Easy To Quit —For $10

Victoria's new health education centre is under way in a cloud of smoke.

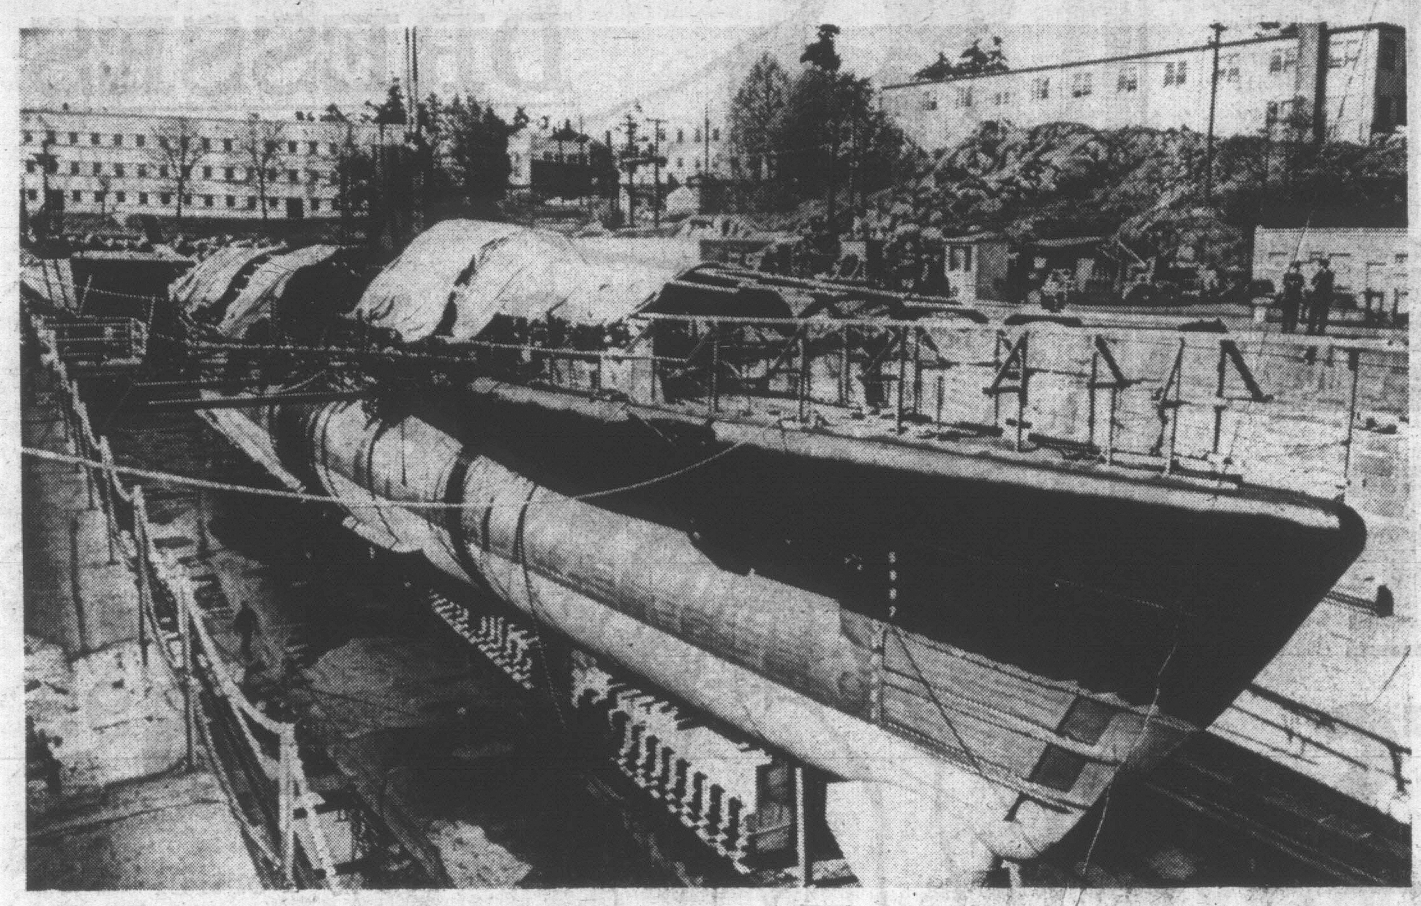

The smoke is from the centre's first program, a five-day quit smoking course, which ends Thursday.

The course has 14 people enrolled and at least that number are signed up for a second course beginning April 26. Tom Bradley, one of the centre's founders, said today the second class will easily reach 20 to 25.

"This class is very enthusiastic and finding real help," he said of the first group. The course uses a buddy system and "it's almost so simple (to quit) they can't believe it."

Bradley, who is administrator at Rest Haven Hospital, said it was initially planned to run the course every other week but it now appears there will be a demand for more frequent classes.

The centre, at 3019 Shakespeare, opposite the Hillside Shopping Centre, was opened last week.

Shunned Liner Creeps Away

With neither pilot nor tugs to assist, the 250-passenger cruise ship West Star steamed cautiously from the Inner Harbor at 1:30 this morning, her departure delayed some 3½ hours by pickets from the Seafarers International Union.

Shipping agent George Dawson today said the ship's owners, Westlines of Seattle, believe the SIU picket endangered their ship and are considering legal action against the union.

"They instructed their Vancouver lawyers to apply for an injunction but nothing could be done last night."

The SIU says Westlines have been getting rid of Canadians on their ships, replacing them with foreign crews. The union says this represents a threat to workers in the B.C. shipping industry.

★ ★ ★

The pilots, members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, supplied a man to bring West Star into the Inner Harbor, about 8:30 p.m., but honored the picket line when time came for departure.

Tugboats did the same.

And while city and visitors bureau officials were on hand to greet the ship, first of several cruise ships that will visit Victoria this year, they little benefitted the 111 disembarking passengers.

For one thing, taxis stayed away from the picket line which was set up beside the old CPR ferry terminal on Belleville Street.

And the bus drivers, members of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, refused to handle the passengers' baggage.

A truck was finally rented, but it was 1:30 before West Star had finished and could get out.

FAVORS GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Pollen Backs Belleville Purchase Bid

Ald. Peter Pollen said this morning he will back a Capital Improvement District Commission bid to bring CPR property along Belleville Street under government control.

He was commenting on a letter received at city hall in which the CIDC asked Victoria city council to investigate ways and means of acquiring waterfront property adjacent to the Canadian Pacific Railway pier "either by the city or the provincial government."

The CIDC is an advisory group sponsored by the provincial government and designed to provide some planning advice in the capital city area.

'EXPLOITATION'

CIDC chairman J. Everett Brown asked that the city investigate the possibility and present an estimate "of the probable costs involved" to his group.

Said Pollen: "I'm all for it if it can be accomplished." "I've been for it all along. I don't think that area should be given over to commercial exploitation."

At present Marathon Realty, the real estate development arm of CPR, has commissioned architect John A. Di Castri to design a scheme compatible with the city's design wishes for the area.

Pollen said today he is still unsure of Marathon's final intent.

"The last scheme they put before us was ludicrous," he said.

That was the scheme that stopped city council in its tracks two weeks ago and convinced members that the entire Belleville Street issue should be tabled until a better plan was provided.

In a second letter to city council, CIDC chairman Brown said "the commission regrets that the city took the steps it did recently in approving the waterfront development adjacent to the CPR pier."

City Manager Dennis Young noted tersely that the commission was poorly informed.

"We didn't approve the CPR plan, we tabled the whole thing until they could come up with a development we could support," he said. "And we told Marathon that until they came up with a plan we could all approve we would withold our support for various leases they require for a continuing operation."

TRADE SUGGESTED

On the CIDC proposal that the property involved be purchased by the province or the city Young said government ownership should be approached cautiously.

"You would have to decide first whether you wanted an active area around the Inner Harbor or whether you wanted a sterile area," he said. "Personally I'd prefer a little activity, but that would have to be a council decision."

Pollen suggested a trade with Marathon.

"They have a new docking facility, but no lease. They have a building on property they don't own, a building erected without a building permit; and they have no way of hooking up their sewers without crossing city land.

"Maybe we could agree to throw our support behind their new dock, provide them with what they want if they will give us the adjacent property." (Which would include the old CPR terminal.)

In addition to asking the city to check out prices and the possibility of acquiring the Belleville Street waterfront property, CIDC has asked for representation on the city's proposed harbor advisory committee.

The committee has not yet been formed but is expected to be comprised of Pollen, and fellow aldermen Cecil Parrott, Clyde Savage and Harold Olafson.

Knife Brawl In Cafe Described

An early-morning cafe brawl in which two men were knifed was described in Victoria county court today.

Shirb E. Gilbreath, 26, was charged, before a jury of two women and eight, men with wounding Peter Lindley and John Charles Andrew in Paul's Drive-In Restaurant, 1900 Douglas, around 2 a.m. Saturday, Jan. 10.

Crown Counsel Cecil Branson said the accused got into a dispute with Lindley and Andrew in the cafe. The premises were crowded and there was much confusion. But witnesses saw Gilbreath waving a four-to six-inch knife and shouting "Move on, move on."

Subsequently Andrew and Lindley were taken to hospital bleeding from wounds.

The trial continued this afternoon.

NFB Changes Instructions And Offers Film Free Again

National Film Board headquarters informed its Victoria office this morning that films are again available to the public — and free of charge.

In January, the NFB began charging rent on its films, then, March 4, banned rentals.

Local representative Peter Grant says the change of policy is an interim measure until the Saumier Report is received. Andre Saumier, assistant deputy minister of regional economic expansion, has been asked to recommend film policy.

Grant said bookings for films will only be made from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. although the office will be open for film returns and other business all day.

PERHAPS THERE ARE French-Canadians still who look for a political messiah to solve Quebec's troubles. But Liberal Lesage who fathered the quiet revolution ended near-eclipse with retirement, and no miracle-workers appear on the list of party leaders who will contest the April 29 provincial election.

Bourassa, the Liberal federalist who stresses the creation of jobs as his top priority, offers logic but is unlikely to sway the rural vote.

Rene Levesque, the prophet of independence, still makes friends for his Parti Quebecoise, and not merely among the anti-Establishment young. He touches the heart, he draws wild applause, but it may be that economic stability is now a more compelling dream than separatism.

The Union Nationale under Premier Bertrand is for all its failures, formidable. I expect it will be returned to muddle along with a holding operation while the massive provincial debt grows heavier and discontent deepens.

We can hope that French Canada will work out its destiny within Confederation. We can also be glad that Quebec is blessed with men whose commonsense is proof against doctrinaire eloquence and the demogoguery that confuses issues.

One of these men is Gerard Filion, president of Montreal's Marine Industries Ltd., and a former editor of the French-languate daily, Le Devoir.

Last November, in a speech to Montreal Chamber of commerce, Filion laid home truths before Quebecers in terms that few French Canadians have employed before him.

The Montreal Star printed the address in full — a procedure rarely followed by metropolitan dailies whose space is at a premium. Even though almost half a year has elapsed since the industrialist spoke his mind, some of his utterances are worth reviewing.

Filion saw a Quebec that has undermined its quiet revolution.

"We let ourselves be carried away by magic words," he said, "by high-sounding, empty phrases, by promises made a hundred times and broken a hundred times. It is not necessary to demand that our politicians be geniuses, but simply that they not take themselves for geniuses.

"This mania for grandeur which has engrossed our Quebec politicians since 1960, this prestige policy which leads our minister of education to go strutting around Naimey or Paris when our schools are on strike, is sheer Don Quixote-ism."

But the trouble as Filion sees it is by no means all with the politicians. Quebecers must revise economic thinking that has not advanced since the black years of the Depression. In an era of multi-national corporations, they continue to think small.

Canada's least solvent and heaviest-taxed province still remains on the fringes of the western technological world. It reserves the place of honor for the professional man, and after him for "that vaguely definable category of those who are generally termed intellectuals."

Again and again, Filion scores the Quebecer's lack of enthusiasm for business and primary industry on the scale his province requires and for his harping on exploitation of the province by Ottawa.

"How could Ottawa take more money from us than from other parts of the country," he asks, "when our gross provincial product is 10 per cent lower than the national average and 27 per cent less than that of Ontario?"

He finds French Canada abounding with intellectual games designed to find who is responsible for its ills. "The conquest" invariably gets the blame.

"For 200 years we have lamented the loss of a battle. Since the Plains of Abraham we have forgotten nothing and learned nothing."

Filion would have his people abandon the morbid delusion that they are the victims of all who speak English. He would also have them learn that "they will take their place in every mileau by their work and by their competence. Nobody will bow before them because they are of the French language, because they are bilingual, because they yell loudly or because they smash windows."

Most of all, he wishes for them the quality that produces strong men and strong peoples — a will to success.

"If we don't have it," he warns, "no matter how much we go into the streets, set off bombs, proclaim French unilingualism, separate Quebec only to link it up again with the rest of Canada, we will remain snivellers and ragamuffins."

A harsh summing up. But one that if heeded would go farther toward solving Quebec's problems than provincal election, federal paternalism or even a changed Canadian constitution.

Shop Cart Thief Fined $400

Walter Hanaka, 54, of 810 Esquimalt, was fined $400 in court Tuesday when he was found guilty of stealing a shopping cart from a department store parking lot.

Hanaka told Judge William Ostler that he had borrowed the cart from Woolco department store, 3651 Douglas, Feb. 3 to carry paint cans while he painted his house.

Hanaka said he intended returning the cart in "three or four days."

A witness testified that he had seen the accused drive off with the shopping cart in the trunk of his car about 7 p.m. Feb. 3.

The witness pounded on the fender of the car as it drove off and then reported the licence number to the store officials.

Saanich police said they went to the accused's home later the same evening and Hanaka showed them the cart, saying he got permission to take the cart from a store employee.

In company with the investigating police officers, Hanaka returned to the store but could not locate the man he had spoken to concerning use of the cart.

The officers searched Hanaka's garage and found the remnants of another cart as well as numerous wheels.

Barry Richard Simpson, 20, of 2646 Cook, was fined $500 for impaired driving and his licence was suspended for four months.

He was involved in an accident at Hillside and Douglas about 10 p.m. March 15 when he drove into the rear of another vehicle.

★ ★ ★

Robert G. West, 25, of 906 Linden, was fined $250 and placed on a six-month probation for forgery involving three cheques.

The cheques, all for $10, were written on the account of the accused's mother and had been attempted to be cashed by another youth at The Bay, 1701 Douglas, in December of last year.

DDT Replaced

RED DEER (CP) — A chemical which breaks down rapidly will replace DDT in this city's 1970 mosquito control program. Baytex costs 10 times as much as DDT but is much safer to use, said Lloyd Murdo, parks superintendent. And, he said, only one-fifth as much is needed.

Estranged Beatle Sings

NEW YORK (UPI) — Paul McCartney will make a solo television appearance Sunday night, his first since he announced he was parting company with his fellow Beatles.

A spokesman for the Columbia Broadcasting System said McCartney would appear on the Ed Sullivan Show in a film he produced for the program with his American wife, the former Linda Eastman.

McCartney, who announced last week he was leaving the Beatles at least temporarily, will sing "Baby, I'm Amazed" from his new record, CBS said.

MEMORIAL TOTEM POLE HONORS GREAT CARVER

The provincial government has authorized the carving of a memorial totem pole for Chief Mungo Martin, famous Kwakiutl carver, who died in Victoria in 1962.

The totem will be erected at Mungo's birthplace, Alert Bay, situated about 20 miles south of Port Hardy. He was also buried there.

It will be 32 feet in length and will be carved by Henry Hunt, chief carver at Thunderbird Park, and his son, Tony.

Hunt said the totem will be topped by Ho-Hok, the supernatural raven, two bears, the sun, a bear and the wild woman of the woods.

The carvers expect to complete the pole by June 15.

Nuclear Digging Dangerous; Hopes Fade for New Canal

By VICTOR COHN

WASHINGTON (WP) — The dream of a future sea-level Atlantic-Pacific canal blasted out cheaply by nuclear explosives has been dealt a severe blow — maybe a fatal one — by a group of biological advisers to the canal study commission.

The advisers have agreed in recent months that nuclear digging would create too much dangerous radioactivity, as well as other risks to nearby populations.

They also agreed in a final set of meetings at the National Academy of Sciences that no one can say yet whether a sea-level canal, even if dug by conventional explosives, is biologically safe.

This is because it could mix Atlantic and Pacific fish and other life forms, with possible large-scale extinction of many species.

The biologists think at least 10 to 15 years of intensive research are needed. For one thing, they advise annual counts of ocean populations, like fish and shrimps, just to set base lines by which to judge a new canal's long-range effects.

A set of conclusions like these is now being drawn up as the result of the meetings here of this group — the Committee on Ecological Research for the Inter-Oceanic Canal, headed by Dr. Ernst Mayr, Agassiz professor of zoology at Harvard University.

The committee was named by the National Academy of Sciences at the request of the Atlantic-Pacific Inter-Oceanic Canal Study Commission, created by the U.S. Congress in 1964.

The commission must tell President Nixon by Dec. 1 whether a new sea-level canal to supplement the present Panama Canal is commercially and technically a good idea; where and how it ought to be built; and how much it might cost.

Many new ships are far too large for the narrow passage of the present canal, built early in this century. Others laden with valuable cargoes are forced to delay passage for several costly days because of the traffic jam in the complex series of locks.

Some authorities believe that the saturation point of the present canal will be reached in a few years, lending urgency to studies for a new canal.

The biologists were asked only to design ecological studies of a new canal's effect, not to say how or if one should be built. Their formal report thus may be more limited in scope than their actual conclusions.

All their conclusions, however, are certain to be transmitted to the administration and to the scientific community in one way or another.

Biologists Fear Mixing Of Ocean Populations

Dr. Mayr declined to reveal any of the group's formal recommendations before they are made to the science academy, then to the canal commission. But another committee member said the group "definitely" opposes using nuclear explosives.

Mayr conceded that: "Giving you just my own personal opinion, I think it's rather widely agreed now that using nuclear explosives is nonsensical, especially if the canal is built near any populated areas.

"It's been established just for one thing that the world's tritium level would go up by about 50 per cent." Tritium is a form of hydrogen produced by some nuclear processes.

Several canal sites have been proposed, including some in little-populated areas that cross Colombia and Nicaragua - Costa Rica. But those now most favored, it is learned, are two within 50 miles of the present canal. The other sites are far lengthier, and economical only with cheap nuclear blasting.

"I think there are three reasons," Mayr said, "why nuclear blasing is unwise—one, radioactive fallout; two, tritium level; three, possible seismic (earthquake-causing) effects of blasts near any populated areas."

Study of nuclear blasting has also won little recent backing from the Nixon administration, though the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission still thinks there is an excellent chance that it could prove safe and economical with more development.

Soviet officials recently said they are planning some extensive nuclear digging, on the basis of what one U.S. official called "more extensive tests than ours."

The AEC did six canal excavation experiments between 1962 and 1968, setting off devices around 350 feet beneath the earth. The last blasted a crater 852 feet across and 208 feet deep.

"As in all cratering experiments," an AEC spokesman reports, "some radioactivity was released. But it was a comparatively small amount —most is trapped in the crater bottom or comes back in earth-rock debris thrown around the crater.

"We found you could go back to the area and work within several months. And we would expect by the time the canal is built—some years away — we would have explosives that release much less radioactivity."

The AEC is working on "cleaner" explosives at its Livermore, Calif., Lawrence Radiation Laboratory. But it also says it needs "at least" four more cratering tests before it can say whether nuclear excavation is a good idea.

None is included in the AEC's fiscal 1971 budget. One was planned for this year, but was finally set aside to concentrate on the Livermore research.

"We've already told the president we can't define the feasibility of nuclear excavation," says John P. Sheffey, executive secretary of the canal commission. "But we certainly think the nuclear experiments should be completed."

The idea of U.S. nuclear blasting anywhere in Central America has found little favor in state department halls.

Bill WALKER

VANCOUVER—You don't get involved in an endeavour for 28 years not to get irrevocably hooked on it. Which is obviously why Norman "Bud" Poile is taking his newest hockey job seriously. That's all he knows.

"Yes, you can say I am the boss," he said from behind a pile of papers in what must pass as only a makeshift home in the vice-president's office at Vancouver Coliseum. "You can see we're busy," he added, while brushing some files aside.

It was a completely dispassionate revelation from the man who will accept the accolades or take the rap for Vancouver's entry in the National Hockey League next fall.

"I will make the decisions for the club off the ice; I will handle all player transactions, contracts, etc., and I will be the one responsible for icing the strongest possible club."

Poile was not solely explaining club responsibilities. He was defining policy, and not ducking any issues.

"Hal Laycoe will coach the club," he answered to a query. "Nothing more. This is what he was hired to do."

And so the Canucks will enter the NHL as a brand new team in the oldest and toughest section of the game of win or lose.

And if there won't be that much talent around to help them win, they won't be going in scared, either, not from a managerial, or coaching level.

Because neither Poile, nor Laycoe, are exactly without credentials.

Bud turned professional in 1942. He was 18 then and with Toronto Maple Leafs, He now is 46, and has missed only two seasons since then because of army service. Fourteen of those years have been spent coaching or managing in the Western League at Edmonton and San Francisco.

At Edmonton his team failed only once in 10 years to make the playoffs. They also won three championships.

●

General manager Jack Adams of the Detroit Red Wings recognized this accomplishment and in what turned out to be a moment of indiscretion suggested publicly that after one more season at Detroit, he would step down, and Poile would replace him.

That was the last Poile heard of the plan, because owner Bruce Norris of the Wings subsequently fired Adams for making policy statements, and hired Sid Abel to replace him.

That's when Poile heeded a call from Coley Hall and moved to San Francisco as coach and manager.

If anything was to break his spirit, working for Hall had the best chance of success.

But Poile weathered four seasons, half a dozen firings, which usually were rescinded overnight, won a pair of championships and then got to meet his new owner, at San Francisco, when Hall sold out to George Fleharty and the Shasta Corporation.

There could be no serenity in this relationship and the feeling was mutual when relations were finally broken off for good.

This led to Philly, one of the more vibrant expansion clubs, a first-year, first-place finish, and then last December another managerial crisis.

Good wasn't good enough for Philly board chairman Ed Snider, and Bud was made available for any new opportunity.

●

When Vancouver beckoned, Poile came west.

"There is nothing I can say about the team at this time," he said of the future. "Actually we won't know too much until the draft in June when we will see what we come up with."

He continued:

"But we are working on it, just as hard as we can. We have seven scouts on the road right now; and we have our own players on the Canucks and at Rochester as well. The scouting and croaching reports will have to be analyzed and discussed. Then perhaps we will have a better idea."

He didn't discount the fear of the season ahead, Vancouver being in the eastern division of the NHL.

"Montreal finished fifth, and din't make the playoffs," he recalled wryly.

"Let's say we will shoot for fourth place, and hope for better.

"I used to say 'first place' but this time I think I'm more realistic by suggesting fourth."

Then he quipped:

"But with Chicago in the other division now, may be we can move up."

And so Bud would like to have something to manage, something he could have faith in, something that his practiced eye could appreciate, if not this season, then perhaps next.

●

That is the problem that will generally test his intellect now that his ulcers have been removed.

And to help him he has hired Laycoe, which makes two refugees from near oblivion reunited for the test ahead.

And this wasn't any friendship acquaintance of long standing. It was more like hiring "my best enemy", said Poile.

"His record speaks for itself," said Poile, of the man he resurrected from the position of director of player personnel in Los Angeles. Laycoe had received that designation when owner Jack Kent Cooke of the Blades found him unsuitable as a coach.

"I wasn't any particular friend of his (Laycoe), said Poile. When we were in the WHL together we often had our differences," he recalled.

"But nearly every time I looked up when my team was in the playoffs, the guy coaching the other team was Laycoe."

"That's why I hired him. And he deserves the chance. Certainly he didn't get it in Los Angeles."

Layco, for his part, is eager to get on with the job.

"I think Bud and I have something in common," he said. "I hope we can put it to good use."

Bruins Take Series Lead On Two Third-Period Goals

BOSTON (CP)—Emile Francis is confident his New York Rangers will be back here Sunday night for a deciding game in their Stanley Cup quarter-final playoff series with Boston Bruins.

The Bruins beat the Rangers 3-2 Tuesday night to take a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven series, but Francis said: "I have no complaints about the efforts of our hockey club tonight, and if we get the same effort Thursday night, we'll be back in business and we'll see you back here Saturday or Sunday."

The winner of the series meets Chicago Black Hawks who won their quarter-final series in four straight games over Detroit Red Wings.

The teams move to New York for the sixth game Thursday night and the Rangers must win to stay alive.

A strong third-period rally by the Bruins Tuesday accounted for the Rangers' demise. The New Yorkers were leading 2-1 going into the final 20 minutes of play but the awakened Bruins got two goals from centrePhil Esposito to gain the win.

Most Critical Period of the Season

"I think it was the realization that this was probably the most critical period of the season for them," said Boston coach Harry Sinden in explaining the sudden rally.

"I said a few things to them between the periods, but lots of nights I've said the same things and nothing happened," Sinden said. "More than anything I could say, I think they just realized the importance of the situation."

The Bruins scored first with defenceman Bobby Orr getting his fifth goal of the series early in the first period. But the Rangers appeared to have the edge in play until the third period, outshooting Boston 22-19 through the first two periods and 30-28 through the complete game.

"They weren't flat," Francis said of the Bruins. "It was because we were playing well and checking well. You're only as good as the other guys let you be."

The Rangers tied the score less than three minutes after Orr's goal when rookie Jack Egers hit on a power play. They took a 2-1 lead midway through the second period when centre Orland Kurtenback broke away and fired a wrist shot to beat goalie Gerry Cheevers.

PHIL ESPOSITO
. . . two goals

KEPT HEMMED IN

But the Bruins hemmed the Rangers in the New York zone in the final period and their persistent attack produced the tying goal less than three minutes after the period started.

Esposito took a pass from Wayne Cashman and fired a 15-foot shot to beat goalie Ed Giacomin. The Bruins kept up the pressure and less than six minutes later got the winning goal when Esposito took a long lead pass from Orr and skated in alone on Giacomin.

Francis tried to slow the Bruins down by sending Terry Sawchuk in as a replacement for Giacomin. Sawchuk played less than a minute before Giacomin returned to the goal, but the delaying tactic failed to cool out the Bruins who kept the Ranger attack in check for the rest of the game.

The Boston crowd of 14,835 saw the teams set two records for penalties.

A total of 28 minutes in penalties was handed out to both sides in the first period which gave them a total of 340 minutes for the series.

The previous record of 322 minutes was set in a seven-game series between St. Louis Blues and Philadelphia Flyers in their 1968 series.

The Bruins added another five minutes in penalties during the second period to break the single-team record. The Bruins total went to 192 minutes, two minutes more than the record set by St. Louis in the 1968 series.

BOSTON PARTY STARTED EARLY

It took just 27 seconds at Boston Tuesday night for this punching party to erupt in Stanley Cup hockey playoff games between Bruins and the New York Rangers. Boston's Rick Smith and New York's Walt Tkaczuk (18) batlte with each other as linesman attempts to break things up and Derek Sanderson of Bruins tries to hold Tkaczuk. (AP Wirephoto)

'If You Don't Skate, You Don't Win'—Burns

ST. LOUIS (CP)—Charlie Burns, playing coach of Minnesota North Stars, accused his club of letting down and gawking in its 6-3 loss to St. Louis Blues in the fifth game of their Stanley Cup quarter-final playoff Tuesday night.

St. Louis took a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven Stanley Cup series which moves to Minnesota for the sixth game Thursday.

"We stopped skating," Burns said. "It's cut and dried. Hockey is a game that you skate in. If you don't skate well, you don't win.

"We go home and fly and we come here and fly for a period and then we stand around and gawk," said Burns, who scored one Minnesota goal.

"The first period we were in command, I thought, and then all of a sudden we stood around and watched. There was one club playing out there the last two periods, and that was them."

Blues coach Scotty Bowman said: "That was a helluva goal Red (Berenson) got. It broke their backbone."

Berenson stole the puck from Minnesota's Bill Goldsworthy to score the final St. Louis goal at 7:08 of the third period while the Blues were shorthanded.

WORKED LAST 10

"In the second period, the final 10 minutes, we were working," Bowman said. "We were the type of team we've been all year."

Centre Phil Goyette of the Blues said: "In the first period, I thought they played some of the best hockey. After that they slowed up and we came on."

The North Stars beat the Blues 4-2 and 4-0 in the third and fourth games of the series at Minnesota during the weekend and their winning momentum carried them to a 2-1 first-period lead on goals by Jean-Paul Parise.

Veteran Blues goalie Glenn Hall was beaten in the second minute of play by a screened shot from Parise.

Tim Ecclestone tied it up for St. Louis three mintues later but Parise took a pass from Bill Goldsworthy to beat Hall again with close shot from in front of the nets.

HAD SHOTS EDGE

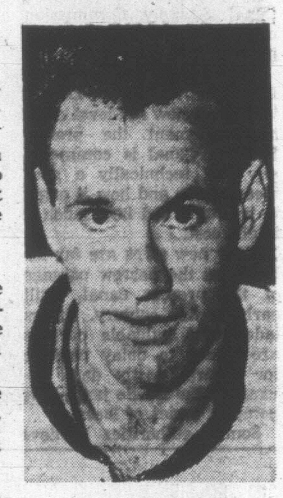

The Blues outshot the North Stars 12-10 in the first period and 18-6 in the middle period when Larry Keenan and Gary Sabourin scored to put St. Louis in front.

Terry Gray, Jim Roberts and Berenson completed the St. Louis scoring early in the third period and Burns counted for the North Stars midway through the period.

The Blues took 37 shots at Minnesota netminder Gump Worsley while Hall managed 18 saves in the game.

A crowd of 17,208 fans chanted and stomped in time with organist Norm Kramer's rallying tunes to urge the Blues on. The players may have a tougher time when they go back to Minnesota where they were pelted with debris by the North Stars fans during both the weekend games.

A win for the North Stars Thursday night would send the series back to St. Louis for a deciding game Saturday or Sunday but a win for the Blues would put them into the West Division playoff against Pittsburgh Penguins who downed Oakland Seals in four straight games.

Out of Hospital

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (CP) — Douglas C. Peahead" Walker has returned to his home in Charlotte after spending several weeks in critical condition at a hospital.

Walker, head football coach of Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Football League for nine years, had suffered circulatory problems resulting from surgery and his family said he was in "exremely serious" condition.

Grand-Slam Blow in Ninth Trips Braves in Slugfest

By The Canadian Press

The Atlanta Stadium scoreboard operator had a heavy workout Tuesday as San Francisco Giants battered the Braves for a 15-11 National League victory.

San Francisco outfielder Ken Henderson broke up the slugfest with a ninth-inning grand slam home run, his fourth hit of the night.

In other action Tuesday, St. Louis Cardinals nipped Montreal Expos 6-5 in 10 innings, Los Angeles Dodgers edged Houston Astros 3-2, Chicago Cubs beat Philadelphia Phillies 5-4, Pittsburgh Pirates tripped defending league and World Series champion New York Mets 6-4 in 10 innings and Cincinnati Reds whipped San Diego Padres 6-1.

Atlanta opened up an 8-0 lead with a big rally in the second inning, and the Giants answered with five runs in the third, three of them on Dick Dietz's homer.

Willie McCovey tied the score in the eighth for San Francisco with a two-run homer and Hank Aaron tagged his fourth homer of the season for Atlanta.

TOLAN BEATS PADRES

Bobby Tolan won for Cincinnati over the Padres with a bases-loaded home run. Tony Perez and Johnny Bench also homered for the Reds.

The Cardinals pushed across two runs in the last of the 10th on pinch singles by Jim Campbell and Cookie Rojas to overtake Montreal. Jose Cardenal had three hits including a homer for St. Louis and Rusty Staub drove in three runs with two singles for Montreal. Marv Staehle's two-out triple in the top of the 10th had given the Expos a 5-4 lead.

HOME BEST PLACE

Home is still the best place to be for Detroit Tigers' Al Kaline and Boston Red Sox's Reggie Smith, but the other man's grass has been greener this spring for the California Angels.

Kaline marked his 18th home opener in Detroit Tuesday with a two-run double that helped the Tigers maul Cleveland Indians 12-4 and Smith crashed a homer, triple and double as the Red Sox whipped New York Yankees 8-3 in their American League start at Boston.

But the Angels, who had reeled off five consecutive road victories to set the early pace, bowed to Chicago White Sox 3-1 in their initial home game as Joe Horlen tossed his 100th career victory.

BREWERS BOMBED

In the only other American League game, Oakland Athletics bombed Milwaukee Brewers 9-1 behind left-handers Al Downing and Paul Lindblad. Kansas City Royals and Minnesota Twins were snowed out at Minneapolis and Washington Senators' game at Baltimore against the Orioles also was postponed because of wet grounds.

"You always enjoy playing in front of a home crowd on opening day," said Kaline, whose double keyed a four-run third inning salvo at Detroit, where the Tigers pounded out 15 hits before crowd of 46,891. "I think there's a little extra incentive when you know everyone is behind you."

BOWLER OF WEEK

Solid middle game of 301 has helped Marlene Mitchell step back into victory circle of Times Bowler-of-the-Week contest. After missing weekly award last season, Marlene collected women's tenpin honors in 25th week of current competition by rolling 187-201-166—554 series in Ladies' Commercial League at Mayfair Lanes. All winners of weekly awards are eligible for Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs on May 10.

TREVINO REMAINS . . . . . IN TOP BERTH

Casper Fifth in Cash

NEW YORK (AP) — Billy Casper moved into fifth place among the top 10 money-winners with his Masters victory Monday, the weekly tabulation by the U.S. Professional Golfers' Association shoed today.

Casper now has won $53,966 so far, compared with $84,272 for first-place Lee Trevino. However, Casper still is not in the top 10 of the new point system used by the PGA tournament players division.

This week's top 10 point leaders are Trevino 655.3 points, Bob Lunn 587.9 Dick Lotz 530.5, Tommy Aaron 511.6, Dave Stockton 450.8, Grier Jones 443.5, Frank Beard 435.0, Miller Barber 432.5, Ron Cerrudo 431.0 and Tony Jacklin 426.0.

The top 10 money-winners, with number of tournaments completed victories and times finished in the first five: Trevino, 12-2-3, $84,272; Lotz, 12-1-4, $67,021; Lunn, 13-1-4, $58,826; Gary Player, 5-1-2, $57,371; Casper, 9-2-2, $53,966; Bruce Devlin, 8-1-3, $48,769, Jacklin, 11-0-3, $41,726; Bert Yancey, 10-1-2, $41,378; Barber, 14-0-2, $40,341; Bob Stanton, 11-0-2, $37,542.

Esquimalt Terriers launched the defence of their Canadian Forces volleyball championship as tournament play started today at CFB Esquimalt's Naden gymnasium.

Six other teams from bases across Canada as well as one from Soest, Germany, are attempting to dethrone the Terriers.

Finals of the fourth annual tournament are slated to be played Saturday.

There is no admission charge for the tourney and parking is provided for the public next to the gym.

Defending Champion Heads Select Field

LAURIE CARROLL
. . . former champ

Some of the big names are missing, but the 1970 Times Vancouver Island Open match-play tournament will start off with the most selected field in history.

Only golfers with handicaps of nine, or better, were accepted. The field of 166 will tee off Sunday at Uplands Golf Club for the 18-hole qualifying round.

Thirty-two low scorers will qualify for championship match-play that starts the following Sunday and winds up May 24 with the 36-hole final. Another 32 will qualify in a handicap division for the Hugh Francis Trophy.

Over 200 entries were received for this year's tournament. The limit of 160 was extended to 166 to accommodate all nine-handicappers entered and eliminate the need of a draw.

Defending champion Norm Boden of Cowichan heads the list of entries but notable among the missing are former Canadian seniors champion Dr. George Bigelow and professionals Bill Wakeham and Vaughan Trapp, both former winners of The Times Trophy.

Bigelow passed up entry because of a scheduled trip to Great Britain next month. Both Wakeham and Trapp, along with pros Dick Silverberg and John Morgan, did not enter because of conflict with the $20,000 Eugene Classic in Oregon next month.

But the entry of low handicap golfers assures a top-flight challenge for the Island's popular match-play tournament.

FORMER CHAMPIONS

In addition to Boden, other past champions entered include Lawrie Kerr of Colwood, Bill MColl of Victoria Club and Laurie Carroll.

Almost all of the district's leading young golfers are entered. The list includes Cec Ferguson, Mike Gray, Carl Schwantje, Rick Kent and Dave Mick, all playing off scratch or one handicaps.

In addition to Boden, Carroll and Ferguson, who recently applied for his professional's card, other pros entered are Bob Hogarth, Bob Hammer, Earl Davies, Ron Cush and Bill Court.

Lowest handicapped player entered is Uplands amateur Bob Hunt, who plays off a plus-one.

First round of match-play will be contested April 26 at Victoria.

Jake Gaudaur Won't Return To Ski Hills

TORONTO (CP) — Commissioner Jake Gaudaur has returned to the Canadian Football League offices after a two-month recuperative period which followed a skiing accident Feb. 17.

He is still on crutches, unable to sit at his desk and uncertain when he will be able to begin walking again.

The accident, which resulted in a fractured hip, didn't prevent him from carrying on the everyday chores of running the nation's professional football interests, but it did result in a resolution.

"I've tackled my last hill," he said.

Gaudaur, 50, had just taken up skiing when he lost his balance and suffered the accident.

QUEBEC OFFICIAL CLAIMS . . .

Probe of Hockey Brawl Asked

. . . POLICE ATTACKED PLAYERS

QUEBEC (CP) — Justice Minister Remi Paul has called for an investigation following reports that members of the Quebec Remparts junior hockey team were roughed up by Charlottetown police in the Prince Edward Island capital Monday night.

Mr. Paul sent a telegram Tuesday to his P.E.I. counterpart, J. Elmer Blanchard, asking for a complete investigation of incidents which led to the calling of an Eastern Canada Memorial Cup playoff game between the Remparts and Charlottetown Islanders.

Officials terminated the semi-final junior A match after police and firemen were required to break up a brawl between the teams.

Mr. Paul said he made the request after reading reports in Quebec City newspapers that police attacked Remparts players.

Referee Jack Johnson called the game at 14:47 of the final period after he and linesmen finally broke up the battle with the help of 12 policemen and several firemen.

COACH EJECTED

Maurice Filion, Remparts coach, was thrown out of the game for joining the melee. Johnson said the coach was using profane language.

Andre Savard, centre with the Quebec team, was fined $20 and costs in Charlottetown Tuesday after pleading guilty to disorderly conduct for getting into the scrap while in civilian clothes.

Savard was ejected at 9:03 of the second period but when both teams left their benches for the last fight, Savard went onto the ice. He was arrested after resisting police efforts to remove him.

Johnson awarded the game to the Islanders, leading 6-4 when the outbreak occurred. It gave them a 2-0 lead in the best-of-seven series.

Jean Sawyer, who handles Remparts' publicity, told reporters:

"They (police) should have come to the aid of the officials and separated the players, but they limited themselves to attacking the Remparts players, injuring some, including Yvon Blais and Roland Goyette.

"If one of our players seemed to be beating a home-town player, the police immediately descended upon him."

DECISION PROTESTED

The Quebec coach has protested the decision to call the game to the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

Pius Callaghan, president of the Maritime Junior Hockey League, called the Quebec players' performance "the worst display of sportsmanship I have ever witnessed." He placed the "whole blame" on the Quebec coach.

Next game is scheduled here Friday.

Name-Changing Marathon Ace Seeks Records

By The Canadian Press

If you can understand a man changing his name because he "just didn't like it," you have an insight into the organized perfection that could make Jerome Drayton of Toronto a great world marathoner.

Drayton, who shot into world prominence by winning the Fukuoka marathon in Japan last December, not only plans to win the world's three major marathons this year; he plans on setting records in each.

He will go after the Boston Marathon record next Monday, the British Empire Games marathon record in July and the unofficial world record in Fukuoka in December.

Runners have undoubtedly dreamed along those lines before. None of them, however, has ever possessed the credentials of a Jerome Drayton.

To appreciate the Drayton desire one must go back to the spring of 1968 and the U.S. Olympic marathon trials at Detroit.

An unranked runner by the name of Peter Buniak of Toronto broke the tape to win the trials in 2:23.57 in his first marathon ever.

The name Peter Buniak hadn't even appeared on the list of Canadian athletes at the 1967 Pan-American Games in Winnipeg.

But Peter Buniak appeared in the 1968 Canadian marathon trials — his second attempt at the 27-mile distance — a few weeks later and won over Pan-American champion Andy Boychuk of Oshawa, Ont.

JEROME DRAYTON
. . . runs Monday

In the regular track and field trials for the 1968 Canadian Olympic team a few weeks after that, Peter Buniak defeated defending champion Dave Ellis of Toronto in the 10,000 metres.

The Canadian selection committee contended that his winning times — 2:16.11 in the marathon — were not impressive enough to gain him a berth on the national team, however.

When the selections were announced. Boychuk and Ellis were both named because of better times earlier in the year and Buniak was ignored.

Team managers and coaches complained, however, and Buniak was added as an afterthought.

Dysentry forced him to abandon the 1968 Olympic marathon at Mexico City after 15 miles, and shin splints forced him out of the 1969 Boston Marathon.

Meanwhile, Peter Buniak had changed his name.

"I had always liked Jerome as a name and when I found out from a lawyer frind of mine how to go about making the change, I decided to do it. I wanted a name that sounded good with Jerome and that's how I chose Drayton."

And so, the 25-year-old accounting student entered the Motor City marathon at Detroit last October and posted a time of 2:12 — his fastest ever — to win.

A few months later he ran even fast — 2:11.2 — to win the Fukuoka marathon.

"I think I can break the Boston record," he says. "It just depends on the type of day — something like 55 to 60 degrees and cloudy with a light rain would be best."

The record is 2:13.45 over a hilly course.

Drayton follows the Arthur Lydiard method of training. There are no involved systems, just running. He runs 15 to 20 miles a day and does a minimum of speed work.

Lydiard, the New Zealand marathoner who later trained world champion middle-distance runner Peter Snell, contends that this is the best method.

"Why build up muscles in your arms when you're training to be a runner," Lydiard said.

Work at Munich Going Smoothly

BONN (AP) — Willi Daume, president of the organizing committee for the 1972 Olympics in Munich, said Tuesday preparations for the Games are progressing "without a hitch and according to schedule."

Daume told a news conference the organizers expect 2,000,000 visitors, 12,000 athletes and 4,000 journalists to come to the Games. He said the costs are estimated to reach $43,800,000.

HALL-OF-FAME BANQUET SCHEDULED FOR MAY 19

Officials of the British Columbia Sports Hall-of-Fame have announced that the hall's second annual "banquet of champions" will be held in Vancouver on Tuesday, May 19.

They expect to announce next week the list of guest celebrities scheduled to appear at the banquet, which will again feature the induction of new members into the hall-of-fame. Included in this year's six new members are Victoria's Bruce Humber and former-Victorian Art Chapman.

With the heavy demand for tickets to the function at the Hotel Vancouver expected, tickets ($25 each) will be sold only on a reserved-table basis.

One table is being reserved for Victorians, and sports fans from this city may obtain tickets by calling Archie McKinnon at 383-4685.

Proceeds from the affair will go to the hall's development fund.

Lakers 'Tame' Hawks

ATLANTA (AP) — Wilt Chamberlain, Dick Garrett and Jerry West combined for 69 points Tuesday night to lead Los Angeles to a 105-94 victory over Atlanta, giving Lakers a 2-0 lead in the National Basketball Association western division championship playoffs.

The victory was the fifth straight in the playoffs for Lakers, who now return home for continuation of the best-of-seven series on Friday and Sunday nights.

A capacity crowd of 7100 jammed Hawks' home arena to watch what possibly could have been a rough contest after Hawks coach Richie Guerin said "A lot of blood will be spilt on the floor" if officials continued to call "little bitty fouls."

Guerin was fined $1,000 by NBA commissioner Walter Kennedy for his remarks, made Monday. The commissioner said they were "detrimental to basketball."

Actually, it was a tame game until the waning minutes, when it heated up, but no worse than most professional games.

Los Angeles broke the game open by outscoring the cold-shooting Hawks, 32-18, in the third period to take a 78-66 lead. Chamberlain tallied 10 points in the period and West seven.

Triumph by Charlton Seals Aston Villa Fate

LONDON (Reuters) — Aston Villa, one of the most famous soccer clubs in the English League, was relegated to the Third Division Tuesday night for the first time in its history.

Aston Villa's fate was sealed when Charlton defeated Bristol City 2-1 Tuesday.

Meanwhile, Preston's only hope of survival in the Second Division is on goal average over Watford, beaten 3-1 Tuesday night by Huddersfield, Second Division champion.

Preston must win its one remaining match and Watford lose by a wide margin for Preston to stay in the Second Division.

LUTON BACK ON TOP

Preston was English League champion in the first year of competition in 1889, with Aston Villa runnerup. Aston Villa has won the championship six times in all and Preston twice, but both clubs have been on the decline for the last decade.

Luton went back to the top of the Third Division by beating Southport 1-0. With Bristol Rovers losing 2-1 at home to Gillingham, Luton and Orient now look certain of promotion to the Second Division.

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia Lions of the Western Football Conference will sponsor a unluque advancement camp directed at athletes in the 21 to 25 age group across the country.

General manager Dennis Veitch said Tuesday there are many good athletes in Canada who lack the proper training and qualified coaching to reach their potential as football players.

The camp, to be held at Empire Stadium here April 25-26, will include twice-daily practices under head coach Jackie Parker.

Those who show promise will be invited to the regular Lions' training camp.

Island Hoop Interest Mounted Last Season

Increased interest in hoop activities during the past year was indicated by registration figures tabled at the annual meeting of the Vancouver Island Amateur Basketball Association in Nanaimo.

Registrar Ruth McKellar of Cumberland, who was re-elected to a two-year term of office, reported that in 1969-70 there were 1,487 players registered, up 218 from the 1968-69 season.

This upswing was credited to a general rise in interest over the Island as well as the raising of the juvenile age limit to 19 from 18 years of age.

Victoria's Cedric Trueman was re-elected to a second two-year term as administrator of the association.

Members of the association approved an increase in registration fees for pre-midget, midget and bantam players from $1 to $1.50 and juvenile registrations from $2 to $3 per player for the coming season. The meeting was told that the increase would be necessary to help defray transportation costs to tournaments.

Two committees were struck at the meeting.

Moe Turner of Victoria, Mary Godfrey of Lake Cowichan, Carole Robertson of Saanich and Keith Parkson of Nanaimo were named to a tournament-planning committee.

Members of the new administrative-planning committee are John Marshall of Victoria, Jock Gillet of Duncan, Gus Vesterback of Courtenay and Ron Benn of Saanich.

Independence Major Issue In Quebec Vote

QUEBEC (CP)—Robert Bourassa, leader of the Liberal party, and Rene Levesque, chief of the separatist Parti Quebecois, argued Tuesday the respective merits of federalism and independence for Quebec in campaigning for the April 29 Quebec general election.

Mr. Bourassa told an audience at Buckingham, 15 miles east of Ottawa, that Quebec benefits from Canada's federal system of government, while Mr. Levesque told supporters in Montreal that system no longer works for Quebec.

Elsewhere, Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand borrowed a phrase from President Nixon to explain why he believes the main battle in the election will be between his Union Nationale party and Mr. Bourassa's Liberals.

Mr. Bertrand told reporters at Ste. Anne des Monts on the Gaspe Peninsula that Quebec's "silent majority" will vote for the traditional parties and not the so-called third parties—the Parti Quebecois and Creditistes.

CITES REASONS

Mr. Bourassa gave three reasons why Quebec should not separate from Canada:

—A united Canada shields Quebec from the economic and political power of the United States.

—The 1,000,000 French-Canadians living in other provinces would lose their culture and language if Quebec withdrew from Confederation.

—The federal system provides important economic benefits for Quebec by redistributing the country's wealth through the federal government's taxation powers.

Mr. Bourassa said in reference to the Parti Quebecois that "radical options" cannot provide similar economic benefits.

He said the federal government poured about $900,000,000 into Quebec during the 1968-69 fiscal year and spent in the province 43 per cent of all the money allotted for alleviating regional economic disparities.

LEVELS CHANGES

Later, in Fort Coulogne, 57 miles northwest of Ottawa, Mr. Bourassa accused several Union Nationale government members of being "crypto-separatists".

He said men such as Education Minister Jean-Guy Cardinal, Finance Minister Mario Beaulieu, Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Marcel Masse and Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer refuse to say whether they are separatists or federalists.

Mr. Levesque said he is not opposed to the federal system as such but added: "I am against any system that doesn't work for Quebec."

He told about 700 persons who crowded into a north-end Montreal school auditorium that "lives are being wasted in the present system, and it's no laughing matter.

"How can you build anything when we have the hammer here and the nails are buried in Ottawa?

NOTES CROWDS

Mr. Levesque also noted during his speech the "fantastic" reception his party has received at rallies during his weekend tour of eastern Quebec ridings, but Mr. Bertrand was skeptical about whether the phenomenon would make itself felt election day.

"The Parti Quebecois started the campaign on the crest of a popularity wave and it can't do anything but go down from now on," he said.

The same was true of the Creditistes, who enjoy strong support in some rural areas of the province, Mr. Bourassa said.

Asked to comment on the large turnouts so far for Parti Quebecois rallies, the premier said:

"This is quite normal. There's a curiosity element involved, and there is also a certain fanaticism. In the third parties, people keep together and demonstrate more.

However, the "silent majority" of Quebec voters would remain loyal to the Union Nationale and Liberal parties.

PROVENCHER
. . . dream realized

Separatist Cleric Unique Candidate

MONTREAL (CP) — Before Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand called a Quebec general election for April 29, Gerard Provencher was Brother Gilbert of the Sacred Heart Order.

Now he is Mr. Gerard Provencher, completely secularized and free of all Roman Catholic vows until his political life is over.

He is a candidate for the separatist Parti Quebecois in the Liberal-held riding of Chateauguay, near Montreal.

"I thought I would die before I saw a nationalist party in Quebec politics," Mr. Provencher said in an interview. "Now my dream is realized and I will take all roads to achieve my objectives."

Mr. Provencher is the only member of a religious order to be a candidate in the current provincial election.

Monseigneur Francois Xavier LaBelle, appointed deputy minister of agriculture and colonization under the cabinet of Honore Mercier, premier from 1887 to 1891, was the only member of a Quebec religious order ever to be successful in provincial politics.

CRUSADE NOT NEW

Mr. Provencher, who calls himself a phenomenon in the history of Quebec, is not new to the idea of Quebec aux Quebecois.

He has been running his own personal crusade since he was a 17-year-old brother, 49 years ago.

He started writing for journals, "analysing what I saw, noticing grave injustices against the French on the part of the English."

Mr. Provencher recounted some of the stories which enraged him and made him the staunch nationalist he is today.

"I was in a restaurant where the waitress couldn't speak French. I demanded a French girl and proceeded to speak English to her to give her a lesson in politeness.

"Then there was the naming of the Queen Elizabeth Hotel back in the mid-50s. I was in the centre of a group who wanted it called Chateau Maisonneuve and our group collected 36,000 signatures asking for the French name.

"Of course, nothing was done so we burnt an effigy of the president of the Canadian National which was built in a school in suburban Verdun when I was prefect of studies."

Credit Unions Challenging Banks in Established Areas

By BUD JORGENSEN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

An average of more than one of every five Canadians are members of credit unions, whose total assets have increased threefold in the last decade.

From their origins in the rural parishes of Quebec, credit unions have prospered across Canada and now have more total assets than the country's mortgage companies.

Credit unions started as savings and loan co-operatives. The common bond could be a geographical area—a community or parish—or an organization such as a company or a church.

A Cross-Canada Survey by The Canadian Press shows credit unions are becoming firmly established in areas traditionally served by banks and other financial institutions.

Total number of credit unions is about 4,500, with about 1,650 each in Ontario and Quebec. Membership across the country totals about 4,741,000.

STARTED IN 1900

The first credit union in Canada was established at Levis, Que., in 1900 by Alphonse Desjardins, and total membership in Quebec now is 2,587,000. Ontario's credit unions have 940,000 members and there are 350,000 in British Columbia.

Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures show local credit unions had total assets of $3,963,115,000 on Sept. 30, 1969. That total was $742,000,000 greater than the assets of the mortgage companies.

The credit union movement moved to the Maritimes in the early 1930s and was predominantly centred in small fishing and farming communities.

It spread to the West in the late 1930s and began in Ontario in the 1940s. In Ontario, the occupational bond is most common while in the Prairie provinces and British Columbia community credit unions are in the majority.

New legislation is contemplated in Ontario and a select committee report containing recommendations for major changes in credit union laws was released last year.

Among recommendations is a proposal that "a broader interpretation be given to . . . the act so as to facilitate those credit unions which seek to change their membership bond to a community bond without the imposition of a limitation on the size of the community to be served."

SEEK FLEXIBILITY

The Credit Union Federation of Alberta is seeking changes in the provincial act to make loaning practices more flexible to meet borrowing requirements of member unions.

Manitoba's credit union legislation is scheduled for extensive revision. Among proposals is one that would remove the six-per-cent ceiling on interest paid on savings or share capital.

Changes are also expected in Quebec. One would allow a local credit manager discretion in small loans, whereas all loans now must be approved by a committee on lending.

The Ontario report says there has been a growing tendency on the part of some credit unions towards increasing the number of mortgage loans they make.

The DBS report showed that total personal loans reached $1,508,701,000 at the end of the third quarter of 1969 while the mortgage loan total for dwellings was $1,163,479,000.

Credit unions in all provinces except Quebec, New Brunswick and Newfoundland can issue cheques.

UNIFORMITY LACKING

Two recommendations in the Ontario select committee report recommend that credit unions in that province be allowed to accept term deposits and that a stabilization fund, which guarantees deposits, be established.

There is no uniformity among the provinces on term deposits. Some allow acceptance but there are a variety of regulations concerning rates, maximum terms and the ratio of money on term in relation to assets.

Several provinces require that credit unions have a stabilization fund, since credit unions are not eligible to participate in deposit insurance provided by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corp.

The legal minimums on liquidity vary from five per cent of shares, deposits and borrowings to a combination of five per cent of shares and 25 per cent of deposits.

Following is a brief summary of the situation in each province:

British Columbia: There are 240 credit unions with about 350,000 members. Generally, larger credit unions can do anything a chartered bank can do.

Alberta: Has 256 credit unions, 148,000 members. Credit unions operate similarly to banks and each is autonomous, setting its interest rate. The Credit Union Federation is allowed to invest on the open market, but only in the ratio of four to one based on assets. The ratio for trust companies is 15:1 and the federation wants its ratio changed to 10:1.

Saskatchewan: Has 276 credit unions, 311,000 members. Credit unions are especially strong in rural areas and have most privileges granted banks. There now is a limit of one per cent a month on loans and the legislature is considering giving credit unions more flexibility.

Manitoba: Has 240 credit unions, 180,000 members. The 33-year-old Credit Unions Act allows credit unions to provide most banking services and last October the Credit Union League initiated its CU-Chek program, which operates the same as bank credit card programs.

Ontario: There are 1,650 credit unions, 940,000 members. The Ontario Credit Union League, to which about 98 per cent of the locals belong, supports most recommendations of the select committee report. An exception is in the area of establishment of a stabilization fund. John M. Hallinan, league general manager, said they believe credit unions have worked successfully so far without such a fund.

Quebec: The biggest, with 1,635 credit unions, 2,587,000 members. The unions can only lend money and accept savings. Armand Maltais, the provincial minister whose portfolio includes supervision of credit unions, said the government is preparing a major overhaul of regulations but details have not been released.

New Brunswick: Has 160 credit unions, 109,000 members. The unions can accept savings and make loans. Some unions favor amending regulations to broaden the qualifications for membership.

Nova Scotia: Has 150 credit unions, 100,000 members. A 1969 law requires all locals to be members of the Nova Scotia Credit Union League and the league has suspension powers. Locals can issue cheques and the league has its own mortgage company.

Prince Edward Island: Has 22 credit unions, 10,000 members. Credit unions can provide most services banks provide but most P.E.I. unions have limited resources. Credit unions are required to invest in trust funds and can make loans to non-members if the loan is government-guaranteed.

Newfoundland: Has 29 credit unions, 6,000 members. The unions can make loans and accept deposits and can seek new members through advertising and promotion.

Old Flame

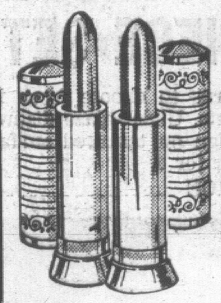

WHITWELL, England (CP) — Joe Streets broke off his engagement to Emily Wilson two weeks before the wedding day. "I wanted to keep my freedom," he said. Joe, a retired miner, is 79 and widow Emily is 81. He was afraid he would have to give up evenings with his pals at a Derbyshire old folks club, he explained. Emily was "heartbroken" at the news.

A RED FLAG will fly over city hall during the second week in May. No indication of the goings-on inside however. It will fly as part of this year's Red Shield Campaign — the Salvation Army's annual drive for funds. This year's goal is $82,000. The chairman, Maj. Hugh Tilley, left, in describing the campaign, said the sum would meet only a portion of the Army's local operating costs for the next year. He said last year's total budget was more than $526,000. Tilley said the Victoria campaign has the support of several local athletes of note, including Hall of Famers Archie McKinnon, Dave Turner, Norm Baker, and Times Sports Editor Doug Peden.

Toongak Popular at Fair

OSAKA (CP) — Japanese fair-goers are crowding into International Bazaar to buy Toongak, an Eskimo doll supposed to bring luck, and to eat pancakes at the British Columbia Crepry.

The International Bazaar, with 30 shops and restaurants from all over the world, is one of the busiest spots at Expo '70 because fair-goers are inveterate souvenir hunters and snackers.

Toongak is a Canadian, mass - produced three - eyed, three-legged doll billed as the "interpretation of a timeless Eskimo spirit that will bring success to its owner." At 75 cents apiece, Japanese are snapping them up at a Montreal-operated concession bearing the red Maple Leaf insignia.

No one ever linked B.C., famous for apples and salmon, with crepes or pancakes but visitors to the Crepry are paying up to $2.25 a portion for them.

At a Japanese concession, you can buy everything from pearls to cloth-bagged bottles of Japanese whisky that tastes just like Scotch at 75 cents for about two good Canadian-sized drinks.

Russia is selling vodka and amber and France has perfumes and parasols. Hong Kong specializes in ball-point pens and wigs. A United Nations booth sells various issues of UN stamps. Britain has real Scotch, up to $35 a quart here, and English biscuits.

Each of the fair's seven plazas has souvenir shops too and at three of them branches of Nippon Kangyo Bank even sell raffle tickets.

Pakistanis Frightened; Viciousness in Streets

By BERNARD WEINRAUB

LONDON (NYT) — In the twilight gloom along Commercial Road, the dull red-brick homes are locked and silent. The Pakistani children peer wide-eyed through white window curtains, gazing nervously at the strangers passing on the street.

"I am so terrified," said Vijay Chandekar, a social worker who sat in the chilly East London mosque. "There is a viciousness now in the streets."

Within the last three months, nearly 40 attacks have occurred in London's East End on the growing Pakistani population. The worst occurred recently when a 50-year-old kitchen porter, Tochir Ali, died of a stab wound in the throat after being assaulted near his home. Homicide detectives began a house-to-house hunt in the East End for the weapon and the killer.

DEFENCE PATROLS

Even before the death, the East End Pakistani community of 4,500 had slowly and uneasily begun to organize. The Pakistani Workers Union—which claims more than 4,000 members—has announced "citizens defence patrols" to protect Pakistani families.

"There are 800 to 1,000 Pakistani working people living in Euston and the Goodge Street area of London, mainly restaurant and catering workers in the West End and railway workers at the North London terminals," said Abul Ishaque, chairman of the union.

"These people have been persecuted by small gangs of white thugs. The police are not doing anything for us—we will be our own police."

In the East End, however, the mood of many Pakistanis remained frightened and puzzled.

"We have had bottles and sticks thrown at our windows, we've been beaten up outside our doors, my father was kicked in the mouth and hit with an iron bar," said 22-year-old Gulum Taslim, the son of the Imam of the East London Mosque.

"Why they do this I don't know. We are meek people. We are scared."

Many of the assaults in the crowded dockside streets in the East End have been sparked by gangs of "skinheads"—surly working-class youths whose close-cropped haircuts defiantly symbolize their opposition to hippies.

"The gimmick is Pakky bashing," said Joe Hunte, a 50-year-old West Indian who is community relations officer for the swarming East End borough of Tower Hamlets, where Pakistanis now live side-by-side with African, Cypriots, Greek, Irish and British families.

"You bash—hit—the Pakistani because they are introspective and remote," said Hunte, sitting in his cramped office in the heart of the pushcart and shop area of the East End.

"They are passive because they are afraid of the city, the strangeness. They are afraid of being deported."

Hunte shook his head. "People's minds are distorted," he said.

"They say quite openly that they don't like the Pakistanis because they eat with spices and they smell funny and they are strange. They're the newest immigrants—and they bear the brunt of a vicious resentment."

Peasants Get Break

FORTALEZA (Reuters) — About 600 hungry peasant farmers invaded a town in a drought-stricken area of northeast Brazil Tuesday in a move to steal meat from butcher stores. But today they were at work sweeping streets, weeding and pruning trees in exchange for food — thanks to the persuasive powers of the town mayor, who set up a "work front" to relieve their plight.

RHODESIAN DREAM 'EXTREMELY BRITTLE'

Poster: Sign of Racist Bravado?

By JIM HOAGLAND

SALISBURY (Rhodesia) (WP) — "This is our country," reads the legend floating above a smiling, kindly looking, middle-aged white couple pictured on a popular Rhodesian calendar. A heavy line underscores "our."

Defiance, or bluff? Cruel racist bravado, or simple statement of fact? Confidence in their ability to halt the sweep of history because they are right, or overcompensation for a nearly hysterical self-doubt?

These questions will swirl about the extraordinary 20th-century rebellion pulled off by the band of plain-talking, plain-looking people so faithfully represented on the calendar.

They may have provided some new and important clues to the answers as they voted over the weekend and gave Prime Minister Ian D. Smith's Rhodesian Front Party all 50 white seats in Parliament.

TEMPER ALTERED

For the campaign and voting noticeably altered the temper of Rhodesia, according to long-time residents. White attitudes during the campaign exacerbated racial tension in Rhodesia, a step that could prove to be a potentially dangerous luxury for a white population outnumbered 20-to-1 in "their" country.

The quarter-million white settlers, who defied Britain and the rest of the world in 1965 by declaring the self-governing colony free of British authority, carried along with them Rhodesia's nearly five million Africans.

The whites have stunned those who predicted an immediate explosion by keeping complete mastery over the Africans. They have also amazed Britain by finding ways to break and survive economic sanctions.

But to a visitor at election time, the Rhodesian dream can seem surprisingly brittle, especially as it is formulated by its leaders.

WHITE FEARS

The campaign seemed to centre around the fears of the white electorate that the Africans are beginning to move in on them. Their demands that blacks be segregated out of swimming pools, schools, hospitals, land and jobs seemed to serve as a self-fulfilling prophecy by creating resentment and perhaps some badly lacking unity among Rhodesia's blacks.

Smith responded to the white electorate with clear signals that he intends to complete the swing away from the paternalistic, multi-racial approach of Rhodesia's past and into the rigid segregationist policies of Rhodesia's major ally, South Africa.

PRIME MINISTER SMITH
. . . he sings about baboons

"This is the beginning of a new chapter," said Sir Roy Welensky, former prime minister of colonial Rhodesia. He characterizes the election as a move to the right that could eventually imperil white rule.

SLOW EVOLUTION

"We never closed the door the black man," Welensky said in an interview concerning former policies that allowed an educated black elite to mix with whites. "The African always knew that there would be a slow evolution. He now knows, under this government, that this is not possible."

For Africans, who were barred from voting for white candidates and who have only 16 representatives in Parliament, the campaign's most vivid racial scar came from an off-the-cuff song sung by Smith at one of his rallies.

As 100 African students and a handful of whites heckled him, Smith led the crowd in singing a South African folk song entitled "Baboon Climbs the Mountain."

Smith later said that since he directed the baboon song at whites and blacks, no racial insult was involved.

"Having the prime minister do a thing like that shows how deep the hatred of this government is for the African people," says Gordon Chavanduka, head of a small African political party.

"Way out in the countryside, old men who heard about this on their village transistor radios came up to me and asked 'Why is Smith calling us baboons? What are you going to do about it?'

INTERESTED

"So I would ask them what they were going to do about it," Chavanduka continued. "I've never seen anything get them so interested in politics."

The election showed that "Rhodesia has adopted the politics of race," says a portly 68-year-old man named Gaston Thomas Thornicroft, who ran for parliament as an independent candidate. "We don't like it, but the whites started it and we'll have to copy it."

Thornicroft, whose father was English and whose mother was African, is classified as one of Rhodesia's 25,000 "Coloreds and Asians," who were allowed in this election to vote and compete with the whites.

AGAINST BILL

Promising to work against a proposed bill that will segregate Asians and coloreds out of now mixed schools and housing areas, Thornicroft came closer than anybody else to beating one of Smith's candidates.

He drew 611 votes, all of them apparently from "my people." He lost by only 40 as the Rhodesian Front produced a heavy turnout of voters to beat him. "The Europeans here are a frightened people," says Thornicroft.

Smith denies that his government has pushed the country to the right in a move to calm the whites.

"We are being honest," he told one election crowd. "We have got a tremendous racial problem, and we are facing up to it."

Dividing the races, Smith asserted, would remove points of racial hostility, and allow the Africans to develop their own resources.

ARGUMENTS

His government advances a number of arguments for segregating Africans out of the institutions that had helped them make advances toward becoming Westernized.

"You see the happiest African faces on the continent here," Smith said. Indicating that the African is materially better off because the white man is there to manage things.

Another case, advanced by Foreign Minister Jack Howman last week, argues that voting is alien to the African tribal system. In contrast to black African countries, the government tries to keep tribal authority alive here by selecting and paying chiefs.

Underlying these contentions, however, is the gut reaction of the whites symbolized by the calendar. This is their country, their sidewalks, their buildings, their money, that they have built up since Cecil Rhodes colonized the country in 1890. They will not gamble on losing any of it to the Africans.

Factory For Pupils

HIGHLAND PARK, Mich. (AP) — This Detroit suburb is trying to keep students in high school by giving them a taste of the kind of jobs they could expect to hold if they drop out.

Highland Park high school has set up a miniature factory in which students work on contracts for Chrysler Corp., General Motors Corp., Saks Fifth Avenue and others.

The suburb, completely surrounded by Detroit, has a racially mixed population of 38,063 and is the home of Chrysler's corporate headquarters.

The high school factory operates as part of a work-study program that employs 72 students for about two hours a day. They average $15 to $17 per week on jobs ranging from envelope stuffing to color-coding parts for car door lock assemblies.

Warren Smith, director of the Highland Park Occupational Curriculum Centre, says most students who come into the program—voluntarily or through teacher referrals—are bored with classroom routine and have no vocational plans.

"Many feel that one day they'll get jobs, and they're not concerned about what kind," said Smith.

Students are usually enthusiastic when they begin the project, but the work soon grows monotonous, he said.

Arctic Hero Image Slightly Tarnished By Skulduggery

Reading between the lines, there was a lot of skulduggery as well as great courage and heroism in the early exploration of the Arctic, Professor Michael Marsden told a capacity audience at a meeting of the Women's Canadian Club Tuesday.

There was even a 16th century version of the cold war with Russia, he said, describing one of the explorer Frobisher's less heroic feats.

Disruption of trade agreements, and arguments about Arctic sovereignty resulted when Frobisher kidnapped an Eskimo and took him back to London.

Ivan the Terrible claimed the Eskimo was a Russian citizen. The Eskimo died within a week of reaching London ("not the healthiest place at the time") but the dispute continued for long after.

Marsden, an assistant professor of geography at Sir George Williams University, has visited the Arctic nine times, spending five full seasons in the North.

"We fly there in jets in four or five hours over distances that took months of walking, carrying packs and guns.

"I regret that there is not more taught in the schools about people paddling around the Canadian North when Shakespeare was writing his plays," Marsden said.

After Frobisher discovered fools' gold and returned to England with it, an expedition of 15 ships was outfitted, partly with funds contributed by Queen Elizabeth. It would have been the first British colony in the north.

"With typical English genius," Marsden said, "they even prepared a prefabricated house for the soldiers and miners.

"Unfortunately, different parts of the house were packed in different boats, and it was impossible to build a house out of the bits of lumber left following the worst gale in a century."

Frobisher eventually became a privateer, a much more profitable occupation.

Whereas Frobisher considered the Eskimos dangerous, one successor, John Davis, made friends with them wherever he went by having the ships band up on deck to play for them.

Davis, a sea captain who studied maths and navigation, is also remembered in history for his remakably accurate charts and maps.

Throughout the long search for the Northwest Passage, there were incredible feats of navigation and superhuman overland treks.

Where the tanker Manhattan got stuck last year, Parry sailed through with no trouble at all, the sailors literally hacksawing a passage through the ice.

John Franklin, "a chubby little man who always is pictured with star and garter and sword" walked 5,500 miles over the area in two years. He prided himself on his multi-racial dwelling where Eskimos, Indians and whites all lived together.

After an adventurous life in many parts of the world, he returned to the Arctic when he was 63 with two well-equipped ships.

When they were within 90 miles of their goal the ice closed in. The ships never unfroze again.

"Franklin stayed on his ship two years before he died, from old age, as far as we know," Marsden said.

For all his admiration of the remarkable feats of the explorers, Marsden admits he is intrigued with the sidelights.

In 1771, Samuel Hearne began a long exploratory walk from what is now Churchill to Coppermine. The first two attempts were unsuccessful.

On the third a wise Indian suggested that their failure was due to the fact that there were no women on the expedition.

So the Indian wives came along to carry the loads to Coppermine.

One day, however when the women were waiting for the men to return to camp, they got fed up, packed up, and headed for home with all the food and equipment.

"It was," Marsden said, "a 1,500 mile race with the men trying to catch up to the women and the supplies."

ELIZABETH AND HER FLYING MACHINE

The only girl among 22 students in the first year of a two-year aviation technology program is Elizabeth Wilby of Alert Bay, pictured above in a Cessna 150. She is taking the course at Selkirk College, Castlegar, B.C., one of the few Canadian educational institutions to train potential pilots for air lines. First-year students normally get their private pilot's licence as well as taking a first-year university science or arts course. Most of the second year is devoted to ground training, and also leads to commercial pilot licence and instrument examinations. Elizabeth hopes to become an instructor.

FOR NEWLYWEDS

Saving Doesn't Make Sense

NEW YORK (UPI) — A London economist breaks sharply with all the financial experts who advise newlyweds to make saving money as much a part of the marriage ritual as the honeymoon.

Saving for a rainy day is not sensible in the early days of marriage. Start stashing away later.

The economist is Prof. Maurice Peston, of the University of London.

He outlines a savings plan based on the fact that a husband's — and possibly the wife's — income will soar astronomically in the years ahead.

The economist explains, "If you are bound to be receiving higher real incomes in the course of time — these incomes being well above those required to maintain a minimum standard of living, let alone bare subsistence — it does not make sense to save excessively at the earliest stages of your earning life."

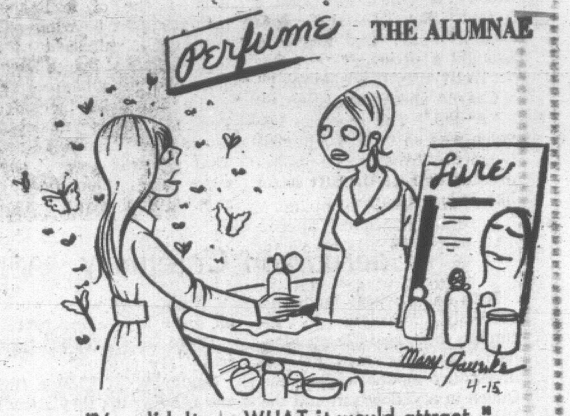

Part of his projected increase is in the ever-growing trend of wives taking on paying jobs. If it continues, he said, "real incomes . . . will be higher still."

Peston discusses family budgets in Getting Married, published by the British Medical Association. The current issue is the 15th of this annual publication.

He makes a case for a savings plan as the years go by — "especially, if quite correctly, you do not regard social security and supplementary benefits (like pensions) sufficient.

Peston delves into the economics of "buying good things to last" also. He points out this is an ever-changing world not only economically but from the technological viewpont.

"There is no objection in principle to buying something to last a lifetime," he says, "but it is worth considering whether something which will wear out more quickly can be replaced by something even better still in a few years . . ."

"You didn't say WHAT it would attract."

Charlie Stays Cool To Grandma's Gift

By PENNY SAVER

Our neighborhood handy-girl, Charlie (who is secretly saving to buy a horse), was weeding our front border when the telephone rang.

"Is Charlie there?" asked her mother. "I hate to interrupt her while she's working, but her grandmother just arrived in town. She's only here for one day and will be very disappointed if she doesn't see her granddaughter."

The next day when Charlie arrived to continue with the weeding, I asked how her visit with Grandma went.

Charlie just shrugged.

"She hugged and kissed me and kept talking about how much I'd grown and who I looked like. Usual grandmother stuff. Oh, and she brought a present."

"Well? Was it a nice one?"

Charlie shrugged again.

"A doll." The scorn in her voice was so typical I almost laughed. "And a sit-on-the-dresser doll at that. It looks like Prince Charles."

I must have visibly pricked up my ears because she added, "She got it in town somewhere. Mom would know more."

Charlie's Prince Charles doll is one of a line that includes dolls wearing native costumes or dressed as historical figures. Prices begin at $3.95 and go as high as $25.

The $25 dolls include the Prince Charles model (so much for Charlie's scorn. That gift was a royal one in more ways than one) and another of Queen Elizabeth.

Caernarvon Ceremony

Both dolls, whose faces are carefully modelled to resemble their real-life counterparts, are costumed for the investiture at Caernarvon, the Queen in a yellow suit and the Prince in ceremonial robes.

Other dolls include Henry VIII's wives as well as costumed representatives of many lands.

"Mother is always giving things like that," Charlie's mother told me. "She herself loves collecting. It solves the gift problem wonderfully. All we do is send her pieces of a set on special occasions.

"Right now we're working on some little china rabbits."

These little rabbit figures really are cute.

Beginning at $3.50 a figure and ranging up, they show the bunnies at various tasks. Most I saw, however, were napping.

Such things as a table with a tasty looking pie, are also sold so the figures can be set up to form little scenarios.

Please call 382-3131 between 9 a.m. and 12 noon if you would like to know where to find these items.

THE BETTER HALF By Bob Barnes

SEW SIMPLE

By EUNICE FARMER

Dear Eunice Farmer,

When a pattern suggests a certain size button for your garment and the button you select is not quite the same size, how can you adjust for this in your construction? My pattern called for buttons "line-45," the buttons that looked best on my garment were "line-42." I'm waiting for you to tell me whether or not I could substitute the size. — Mrs. J. R.

Dear Mrs. J. R.:

Since there are many manufacturers of buttons, and many of these are importers, you will find a great variety of sizes available. Many of them are so close in size that the difference is negligible. One of our largest button companies has furnished me with a marvelous chart of buttons illustrations, both the actual size and the outline of the various sizes. These are available for your personal use if you send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request for "Button Gauge" to Eunice Farmer in care of this newspaper.

Remember, when you choose a button the gauge is 40 lines equals one inch. Besides the width of the button, it is also important to measure your buttonhole according to the depth of the button. The thicker the

Since most fabrics respond differently to buttonholes, it is always a good idea to make a sample buttonhole in the size you desire with the fabric of your garment. Then it is simple to know exactly what size button will fit.

Shelves Arranged To Enhance Room

By PAULINE GRAVES

Books and albums warm up a room as almost nothing else can. They testify to your interests and character, and the jackets, usually in rich tones, add variegated color, achieved in no other way.

Books go on shelves, of course, so the trick is in arranging the shelves to enhance your room, rather than just stacking them one upon the other.

For instance, in this room, by decorator Ione McMillen Keenan, the shelves stretch across the wall, leaving an alcove framed by base cabinets and shelves on each side. The alcove is wide enough to take a sofa if need be, but that is the most obvious furniture placement.

Instead, two chairs and ottomans and a square table with a large lamp fill the space, making it a sort of instant library or reading corner. And it functions well for conversations also.

If you are adding on a family room, or remodelling, give a thought to this idea.

Combining base cabinets with open shelves provides concealed storage for cluttery items, as cameras and games, and anchors the units. Open shelves are made of one-by-eights, except for the cabinets which are twelve inches deep.

Planned for magazines and albums, the shelf that tops the alcove has a slanted back and a strip of molding one inch back from the edge that keeps the periodicals from sliding onto the floor.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Pants Skin-Tight

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I think the world has gone mad with fashions for men. It's bad enough that men are now sporting velvet and ruffles and crazy color combinations in shirts and ties. But how about those skin-tight pants, Abby? The pants are so tight that they're made without pockets.

Where is a man supposed to carry his wallet, keys, handkerchief and pocket comb?—Wondering.

DEAR WONDERING: In his purse, silly!

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are in our early 60s and have had a very happy marriage, but now my doctor tells me that I have an incurable disease and will soon be a helpless invalid, and I'll probably linger on for years as a "vegetable," no good to my husband, or anyone else.

My husband is healthy, handsome and virile, and I haven't had the heart to tell him the awful news that he is tied to a doomed wife who will bring him nothing but misery and anguish for the next few years.

I love my husband too much to ruin his life this way, and am seriously considering getting a divorce and setting him free to seek new happiness with someone who can be a real wife to him.

What should I do, Abby? I would also welcome suggestions from your readers—especially the men. Thank you, all.—I. M. Doomed."

DEAR I.M.: Ask your doctor to tell your husband, in your presence, what he has told you about your condition.

Then don't try to second-guess your husband's reactions, or blueprint his future, however well-intentioned. You won't "ruin" your husband's life—you may enrich it. Because, after a long and happy marriage, he may want to put more into that marriage now than he ever has before.

Now, ask yourself this: "If your husband were dying, would you permit him to divorce you in order that you could seek happiness with another man?" I doubt it.

DEAR ABBY: Ten years ago, when we were married, we decided to have four children. Through the years we were blessed with three healthy sons, and on sharing in the happiness of dear friends who had adopted an infant, an idea grew in our minds.

Since it is true that so many babies are born out of wedlock, and the world population is increasing so rapidly, why should we bring still another child into the world when there are so many children who desperately need the love and care of a family—truly the right of all children?

We made an appointment with a licensed adoption agency. All we needed was a medical checkup, showing us to be physically fit, three character references and a letter stating our religion. (Here the adoptive parents must be the same religion as the baby's natural mother.)

We were interviewed both at home and at the agency and within two months we had a beautiful, healthy, alert, six-month-old daughter.

Please pass this on to others, Abby. I think "natural motherhood" is vastly overrated.—Happy Mother.

Confidential to "Frankly Frank": Keep your lip zipped. No one wants an honest opinion of a horse after he's already bought it.

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069. For a personal reply enclose a stamped, addressed envelope.

Hate to write letters? Send $1 to Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif., 90069, for Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions."

VICTORIA DESIGNER SHOWS ORIGINALS

Sandra posed at the poolside before joining other models at the W. G. Ellis home, 2031 Runnymede, for a private showing Tuesday of original designs by local artist Barbara Burns. Today, the handcrafted Ondine collection was shown at the luncheon opening of the Racquet Club tennis season. Commentator was Mrs. Rodney Taylor. (Robin Clarke Photo)

Youthful Editor Says Publishing 'Fun'

By GLENNIS ZILM

EDMONTON (CP) — "The author worries about the soul of his work, the publisher worries about the finances and the editor is caught in the middle and must please both."

That's how Susan Kent, editor for M. G. Hurtig Publishers, describes her job.

Miss Kent, 24, is probably one of the youngest editors in book publishing in Canada.

She has been with Hurtig's, one of Western Canada's two major publishers, for 18 months and says her job is "fun."

She had no experience as an editor when she started with Hurtig's, but had worked in Vancouver as a printing company proofreader.

"I learned quite a lot about the different kinds of type and design and layout there," she said. "This has helped.

"And I always had a feeling for grammar and sentence construction."

Miss Kent has a degree from University of Calgary and attended the University of British Columbia for one term.

WRITTEN ON REQUEST

Usually books are solicited by publishers who get in touch with someeone they think might have something to say, and together they discuss whether the project should be undertaken.

Only one of the 15 or so books Hurtig's has published has come unsolicited, she said. This was a manuscript by Esther Fraser on early travels and explorations in the Rocky Mountains.

"The Canadian Rockies was the first book I edited on my own," said the slim, five-foot-six brunette. "I enjoyed doing it and enjoyed working with Esther."

When a writer undertakes a project he usually beomes uncommunicative, Miss Kent said.

"We never hear a word. We may write and ask how it is coming or when we might expect the first chapter. But often the author doesn't even answer our letters.

"Then the manuscript arrives—followed immediately by word from the author demanding to know how we like it and when it will be in print."

CLARITY ESSENTIAL

Dalton Camp, who wrote an introduction to Alliances and Illusions, a recent book on the NATO-NORAD question, took months to supply his manuscript, says the attractive editor with a smile.

It was one of the most de-delightful pieces I've ever worked on. But we got the manuscript in the morning mail and a telephone call asking how we liked it that afternoon."

If a book is technical, she arranges for another expert in that field to read it and comment on the technical aspects. Then either she or Mr. Hurtig begins the editing, or they tackle it jointly.

She says she tries to approach a book as an intelligent layman coming to the subject for the first time.

"So far we haven't done any fiction, so I'm looking for clarity and ease of reading. If it isn't clear and easy to read it has to be changed."

An editor is a kind of intermediary between the writer and the reader, she said. She proposes changes if she thinks the meaning won't be clear, if it is presented in an unusual or involved style or may bring difficulties for the reader.

SOME ARE STICKLERS

"If an author is insistent about some item I usually give in, even if I don't agree with the style," she said. "But I try to make him see my point."

Each author is different, she said. With one, an editor may have to discuss each carte blanche, proposed comma change; with another, the editor has

Once the book is edited — or as it is being edited — she works closely with the printer and with a designer for the jacket. She sometimes does the page and chapter layouts herself.

She decides on the kind of type to be used, the margins, the page size, the positions of the page numbers and so on.

"This is creative, too."

Currently she is working with two books: The Prairie Gardener by Bert Harp, the CBC's radio gardening expert, and a History of Western Canada by Edmonton writer Tony Cashman.

Visit City

Mr. and Mrs. N. M. Ostry returned to their Edmonton home Tuesday after spending a week in Victoria visiting friends.

Designers Flirt With Poncho, Shawl Cover-Ups

NEW YORK (CP) — A high-fashion hit of a few seasons back was the circular poncho which emerged in a flurry of Mexican motifs but died out when the hippies adopted them as part of their far-out costumes.

This spring, however, the poncho is back again, along with the fringed shawl which designers have been flirting with for several seasons.

The poncho has been endorsed, even if not overwhelmingly shown in collections, by such trend-setters as Pierre Cardin with his hooded poncho to wear with a skirt or over a coat; Modelia of New York with a series of fringed ponchos, and Wragge with a pink silk poncho lined in coral and worn over pink silk pants for evening.

In Canada, Etlin Leathers introduces a pastel blue fringed suede poncho and matching straight pants. It's an elegant casual look. And in New York, even the men are intrested in leather ponchos for country wear.

Sterling of Winnipeg is showing for spring a beige-and-white-check fringed poncho over a wrap-style dress.

Luv of Montreal has combined the fashion interest in patchwork with a fringed poncho and matching pants in acetate knit.

HOLE IS FOR HEAD

Ponchos are usually circular fling-ons with a hole for the head. They are worn by Mexican men in the country-side for warmth and protection, instead of a jacket.

In South America the descendants of the Incas in Peru wear a poncho version, especially in towns like the old Inca capital of Cuzco high in the Andes.

Big Steel of Toronto has Peruvian poncho styles in hand-knitted alpaca, with Peruvian motifs including a band of llamas.

On the pampas of Argentina and Uruguay, the poncho is an essential part of the clothing of the gaucho, the South American cowboy.

In the feminine take-over the poncho has become elegant for evening or casual street wear or country. Fringed and colorful, it is excellent with the jump suits that are the latest fashion push for both day and evening.

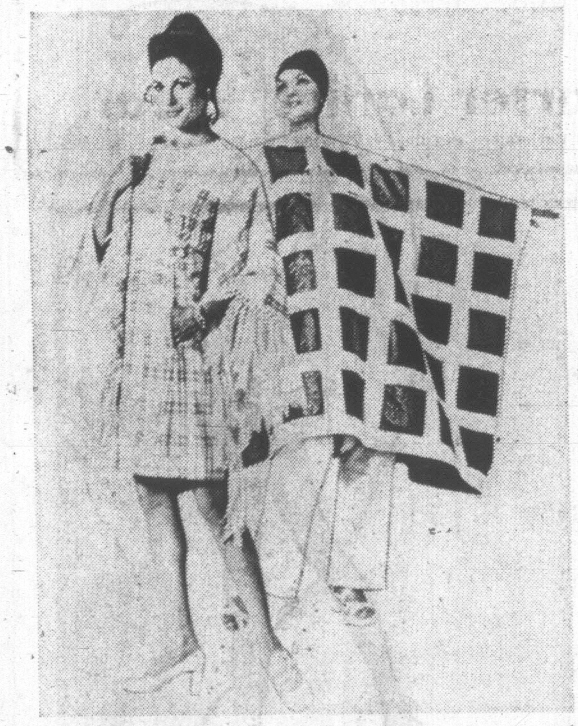

However, many designers still prefer the traditional cape instead of the more casual poncho. Pauline Trigere invariably includes several in all her collections. Norell added little cape tops to coats and dresses.

In Montreal Robichaud included a knee-length navy cape lines in red. And Irish Sybil Connolly likes a full Inverness cape worn over a shift dress.

Another fashion that has been trying to break through for several seasons is the shawl. Probably fashion's avid interest in the past has given it the needed shove forward, for in the late 1920s the deep-fringed Spanish shawl with its embroidered floral designs was much in use as an evening wrap.

In recent years the stole — fabric or fur — became important. Then the fur stole was dropped and long matching satin or chiffon stoles became part of an evening formal. Last season it was a deluge of scarves, short and long.

The shawl is mostly confined to evening, although Lanvin of Paris introduced long tubular shirts always worn with a fringed triangular shawl. Many designers have edged their large evening shawls with feathers, fringes or flower petals.

Duncan to Tackle Slumlord Abuses

DUNCAN — Slum lords — absentee owners who live in expensive homes in the best areas of the municipality or city and rent substandard shacks for as much as the traffic will bear — came under fire in city council by Ald. Allan Kerr.

Council voted unanimously to empower Mayor Jim Quaife and his city administrative staff to check the buildings and condemn them if they are found to be uninhabitable.

Kerr said unscrupulous absentee landlords who rent substandard hovels to poor people were also attracting "spongers" to the city from Campbell River, Oliver, Kamloops and other centres.

Some slumlords live in $30,000 to $40,000 homes in North Cowichan and charge comparitively high rent for their rundown places in the city, Kerr said.

He said the type of person the slum houses attracted lacked even the hippies philosophy but even the hippies philosophy.

More Ties to Past Laid Down by Museum

By ED GOULD

NORTH COWICHAN — They've been workin' on the railroad — Cowichan Valley Railway, that is.

During the last few weeks, general manager Gerry Wellburn and a small crew have been adding a half-mile extension to the one-mile of narrow-gauge steel the Cowichan Valley Forest Museum already has.

With sidings, the museum will own nearly two miles of track for its oldtime rolling stock.

Working side by side with Wellburn — the retired lumberman who conceived the idea of the museum and its driving force for more than 20 years — is young Paul Henry.

FROM YUKON

Henry, 20 has just arrived here from the Yukon where he was a gandy dancer (an oldtime railroad term for trackmen who tamped the earth between the ties with a sharp spade) for White Pass & Yukon Route — the only other three-foot gauge railroad in North America.

Also assisting Wellburn is Pat Phillips, a graduate forester from University of British Columbia who is superintendent in charge of the museum, and Fred Bell, locomotive engineer and maintenance man.

BOYHOOD DREAM

Bell realized a boyhood dream the day he started work here, the day he took control of a steam-belching locomotive and pulled his first freight cars and coaches around the curving tracks along the banks of Somenos Lake.

For the passengers, it meant transportation back to the Golden Era of Steam. For Bell it was even more nostalgic. He told how in 1944 he used to sit in an old locomotive in a scrapyard belonging to S.S. Mogroffin Co., railway contractors in North Vancouver.

Whenever Bell could get away from the caretaker who wanted him to run his golden retrievers, he would sneak off to daydream over the controls of "old 25" — never visualizing that he would some day operate the same old locie after it was restored to good condition and donated to the museum.

PART OF STORY

Of course, steam locomotives and other old and not-so-old steam, internal combustion and diesel equipment is only part of the story of Cowichan Valley Forest Museum. (There's a move under way to change the name to British Columbia Forest Museum.)

Its original dedication was to the forest industry of British Columbia. As leading industry in the province — B.C. produces 70 per cent of the country's output — it is only fitting such a permanent memorial be established.

However, if the term "museum" conjures up a vision of inanimate objects stored in a dusty, decaying atmosphere, forget it! There's nothing dead or inanimate. Displays of equipment are mostly outdoors where adults and children can touch and smell and crawl all over them to get the literal "feel" of the past.

TREE FARM

To further enhance its image of living history, British Columbia Forest Nursery at Koksilah has begun a nursery on the museum property, recently expanded from 25 to 40 acres.

"People will soon be able to see how a tree farm actually operates in this capsule forest," Phillips said.

Practical, as well as instructive and ornamental, the forest will become part of the Koksilah complex with more than 200,000 trees a year being started here and then being transplanted elsewhere in reforestation projects.

The Cowichan Valley Forest Museum opens to the public on May 16.

Indian Band Tries Again To Get Shop Centre Funds

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Indian Band Council will apply for a $2.5 million revolving fund loan to get construction of Khowetzun Centre started this year, Chief Dennis Alphonse said Tuesday.

Alphonse, who is also band manager, said the Indian-owned and operated shopping centre, will contain a supermarket, bank, department store and 10 or 12 smaller stores.

Financing has been delayed for more than a year because of cutbacks in government spending, the high cost of loans and shortage of money.

The centre is planned for a site south of Underwood Street between the E & N Railway tracks and Allenby Road, and will mean removal of The Mound, Duncan's only treed area.

The band council also agreed to purchase about $1,500 worth of books, mainly on Indian culture, which will become part of a library in a proposed Indian social centre.

Speaking Contest Saturday

DUNCAN — Toastmasters and their wives from all over the Island will compete in the Vancouver Island division speech contest at the Commercial Hotel Saturday.

Don Shaw of Victoria Beaver Toastmasters will compete against Al Hussey of Cowichan Toastmasters of Duncan and Pat Barron of Nanaimo 738 Club.

The winner will represent the Island at the all-British Columbia speech contest in Victoria May 9.

Mayor Jim Quaife will greet delegates at a dinner at 7:15 p.m. Trophies and certificates will be presented to contestants by Ron Southern of Cowichan Toastmasters, lieutenant-governor for the Island, and by David Brown of Victoria, district governor.

MANY OVERLOOK STICKER NEED

Motorists in the area, preoccupied possibly with income tax returns and thoughts of spring, are tending to overlook renewing the safety stickers on their cars.

"People aren't paying attention to the expiry dates on the stickers," Insp. Richard Berry said today, adding that he would guess as many as 40 per cent of the cars in Victoria have outdated stickers.

•

Berry said the Victoria force is not going out of its way to find offenders but most culprits are caught when stopped for other traffic offences.

He added that he felt most people could find a better use for the $10 the fine costs.

Officials at the Motor Vehicle Inspection Station at 1150 McKenzie say they have had a steady stream of vehicles for testing recently although this tends to drop off in the afternoon and pick up in the early evening.

•

The station is open from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. Monday to Friday and the fee for testing is $1.75.

A rejected car means 10 days grace in order to correct the malfunction and reappear for another attempt at the one-year sticker.

The fee the second time is 50 cents.

$60,000 Repair Job

Victoria's public works' committee Tuesday endorsed a city engineer's recommendation for Memorial Arena roof repairs costing $60,000.

Engineer James Garnett made the recommendation after informing the committee that the only tender to remove cementex panels and spray the arena ceiling with zonolite quoted a price of $171,693.

As a result of the cost Garnett, recommended that the city abandon the idea of spraying the ceiling after removal of the dangerous panels.

Garnett said he is confident the panels could be removed and patching repairs made for $60,000 if the city used expert crews on a cost-plus-10-per-cent basis.

He added that if agreement could be reached the work crews would be provided by Frank Browne, the bidder for the total job.

'Eat, Drink . . . Don't Talk Politics'

By LOUIS UCHITELLE

CORDOBA, Argentina (AP) — The elaborate gold lettering above the bar in the German Club of Cordoba says, in German: "Eat what you want, drink what you want, but don't talk politics."

For Argentina's huge German-speaking community, often accused of Nazi sympathies, it is safe advice for life in a country still apologizing for having supported Adolf Hitler until the final months of the Second World War.

Martin Deerburg and Ricardo Scholzel gesture toward the inscription and translate good-humoredly when a stranger, joining them for beer, tries to turn the conversation to world affairs.

Deerburg and Scholzel were young crew members aboard the Admiral Graf Spee, the German pocket battleship which sank nine Allied merchant ships in the South Atlantic in the fall of 1939, and took aboard the crews of the sunken freighters as captives.

Finally intercepted by British warships and damaged in battle, the Graf Spee was unable to escape. Her captain, Hans Langsdorff, scuttled the vessel off Buenos Aires Dec. 17, 1939.

The crew of 1,000 was brought in tugboats to Argentina, whose government favored the German cause. Three days later, Langsdorff, 55, wrapped himself in a German flag and committed suicide. About 300,000 persons attended his funeral in Buenos Aires.

'LIFE WAS SUPERB'

Interned under the easiest conditions, many of his crew took jobs and even married—planning to remain in Argentina rather than try to rebuild their lives in war-torn and occupied Germany.

But at war's end, they were rounded up, put aboard the British ship Highland Monarch, and forcibly repatriated to Germany.

"Life was superb in Argentina," said Deerburg, now 55 and employed as a machinist, the job he did on the Graf Spee. "We were practically free and we only had to report to the police once a week."

But in February, 1945, the Argentine government—trying to please the nearly victorious Allies—interned the Graf Spee crew. Deerburg and Scholzel managed to marry their fiancees during the internment, hoping this would stave off deportation. It didn't.

"When we got off the boat in Germany, we spent two months in U.S. and British concentration camps," says Scholzel, 52, a gunner on the Graf Spee and now an airplane factory employee. "We never wanted to stay in Germany. There was no food, no houses in which to live; Germany was destroyed and our wives were here."

By 1950, nearly 500 Graf Spee crew members—half the total—had found their way back to Argentina.

About 50 of them settled in Cordoba, centre of the country's auto industry.

Deerburg and Scholzel said that as Germany began its spectacular economic recovery, they considered returning to their homeland, but both were settled and home-owners here.

The Graf Spee crew formed associations in several Argentine cities—to keep in contact with each other, to keep alive the legend of their naval exploits, and to honor Langsdorff's memory.

Saanich Cuts Deep Into Park Spending

Proposed park expenditures were trimmed sharply Tuesday night as Saanich council cut just over $100,000 from the provisional budget of $9.2 million.

The total net reduction in just over six hours of budget deliberation Monday and Tuesday nights is $172,200, or about 1.25 mills of the provisional 6.93 mill rate increase.

The budget review continues tonight.

Park expenditures, which took the longest time of the evening to review, were reduced by a net $98,200 — principally for a variety of fairly small capital works.

The maintenance budget was trimmed $2,500 to $191,500, an increase of $30,000 over 1969.

The capital budget was chopped by $72,200 to $49,500, or $5,500 lower than last year's expenditure.

The maintenance for the regional district's Elk-Beaver Lake Park was increased by $500 to $42,800, up $1,700 over last year.

Beach access development was reduced by $21,000 to $19,000, up $11,800 over last year.

The park equipment budget was reduced by $3,000 to almost $1,000 less than last year.

The provisional expendure of $25,000 for improvements to Colquitz Creek was reduced to $15,000.

The indoor recreation budget of $157,300, up from last year's $95,751 with the Gordon Head swimming pool opening this September, was untouched.

Capital expenditures of $9,000, however, were cut from the provisional $52,000.

Still to be considered by council before the final budget is set and the municipal mill rate established are garbage, health and welfare, community grants and a variety of capital expenditures, including road construction and waterworks.

KNOTTINGLEY, England (CP) — Britain's heaviest man will get a welcome Christmas present from Britain's fastest knitter — a new sweater. Normally it takes about three months to hand-knit a sweater for 525-pound Arthur Armitage, who has a chest measurement of 76 inches and an 80-inch waist. Champion knitter Mrs. Gwen Matthewman finished the garment in a week.

PROMOTION to the rank of brigadier-general, effective Sept. 1, of Col. D. R. Coell, 1020 Burnside West, was announced by armed forces headquarters this week. With headquarters in Esquimalt, Coell will be Pacific militia area commander. Coell is a member of the assessment commission in the B.C. government.

Coast Road School Set

Sooke school board will build a $115,000, three-room annex to relieve pressure on overcrowded Sooke elementary.

The annex will be located on West Coast Road about two miles from Sooke Elementary.

It will have 75 pupils in grades one to five, about 25 pupils in each classroom.

In a report district superintendent E. E. Hyndman described the proposed annex as "an excellent learning situation."

Lone dissenter to the plan was Trustee Ronald Fitton who said the money might be better spent on more settled parts of the district such as Happy Valley.

Trustee Isabel Reader reminded the board reatepayers had been promised a school on the West Coast Road.

Downtown Phone Lines Underground

Fort Street sidewalks between Blanshard and Douglas are being cut open this week as B.C. Telephone Co. continues its program to put downtown lines underground.

The project, which will take another three years to complete and cost about $500,000, will see telephone lines carried on poles behind downtown properties disappear. The lines will lie underground instead in a grid system surrounding the business blocks.

Work is nearing completion on Langley Street between View and Fort and breakup of sidewalks on Cormorant between Douglas and Blanshard is under way.

B.C. Tel says laying their cables underground is made necessary by continued construction of office buildings. It is becoming impossible for telephone crews to carry out maintenance and provide additional facilities with the overhead lines.

R. C. Simpson, division customer service manager, said every effort is being made to reduce inconvenience to the walking public. All sidewalks were expected to be restored within a week.

He wlil be a reearch sstudent at Cambridge from next October until July 1972, studying for a master of science degree in inorganic chemistry.

No One Shows At Vancouver Hearing

VANCOUVER (CP) — A parliamentary committee from Ottawa, which arrived unheralded because someone forgot that Vancouver's newspapers are not publishing, wound up two days of hearings Tuesday into ground transportation problems of Canada's third largest city.

The 20-member committee gathered in a recital room at Queen Elizabeth theatre Monday, complete with staff and equipment to handle simultaneous translation for French-speaking members. But nobody showed up.

Finally, a hurried telephone call brought Alderman Halford Wilson, chairman of the Greater Vancouver regional transportation committee to the theatre.

"It was the first word I'd had about the meeting," said Wilson.

"I didn't have anything prepared but I spent two hours with them outlining the situation here," Wilson said.

"Apparently the committee has been using daily newspaper advertisements to publicize its intention to hold public hearings in each centre," said Wilson. "Only someone forgot our newspapers are on strike."

Vancouver's two daily newspapers, the Sun and the Province, suspended publication Feb. 15 in a contract dispute with their employees.

'Same Old Belly-Button'

By KEVIN DOYLE

OTTAWA (CP) — Northrop Frye, principal of Victoria College, Toronto, asked Tuesday night whether television in the future will be anything more than "another panorama of belly-buttons."

Dr. Frye, now a visiting professor of English literature at Oxford University and member of the Canadian Radio-Television Commission, asked his question at a public hearing of the CRTC which opened Tuesday.

Murray Chercover, president of the CTV network, was completing a lengthy submission to the commission requesting the network's licence be renewed.

Also applying for licence renewals are the 12 CTV affiliated stations and the CBC TV and radio networks.

Dr. Frye told Mr. Chercover that earlier in the day a CTV affiliate had shown a film on which its only promise of future program improvements was a camera shot, "a close-up, of a belly-button."

LOOKS FAMILIAR

"That belly-button looked to me like the ones we saw last year and this year but what will CTV do, for example, to meet the needs of young people," Dr. Frye asked.

He said he had been in close contact with univtrsity students for most of his life and they have "given up on TV."

Mr. Chercover said the network is constantly investigating new ways of communicating with youth. "We are experimenting always in new methods of two-way communications."

Later in Tuesday's session, which ran into the late evening hours, Finlay MacDonald, president of CJCH-TV in Halifax, told the commission his station's award-winning public affairs show ID had been successful because it dealt with issues relevant to the area.

ID won the Canadian Association of Broadcaster's award recently for the best TV news and public affairs program.

NO ADVERTISING

Mr. MacDonald said the show does not have a large audience. Nor did it attract any advertising revenue.

Mr. MacDonald said the program ID never sets out to "prove that someone's a fool. We try to bring out all the facts and let the public decide."

He said the station had supported candidates for public office, however, on numerous occasions.

"But we never received the thanks we deserved because all of them lost their deposits."

Later in the hearing the CRTC will hear a lengthy list of submissions on its proposals for increasing Canadian content on AM radio and TV.

April Indicator In Price Fight

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — Consumer prices, as everyone knows from the heft of his pocketbook, continued to go up last month. But statistically, there was a slight improvement in Canada's price performance.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reported Tuesday that its consumer price index, based on 1961 prices equalling 100, rose to 128.9 from 128.7 in February and 123.2 in March last year.

This was an increase of two-tenths of one per cent in the month and 4.6 per cent in the year from last March.

It compares with February's increase of four-tenths of one per cent over January prices, and February's increase of five per cent from 12 months earlier.

Prices rose by 4.5 per cent, on the average, during 1969, and in December they stood 4.6 per cent higher than a year earlier. January prices were also 4.6 per cent higher. Then February bounced the annual rate higher.

BACK TO EARLIER RATE

The small March increase, therefore, only put the rate of climb back to what it was two months earlier.

The price index hasn't fallen since last September, when it declined two-tenths of one per cent.

And a ticklish month lies ahead. Last year, the price index made its biggest monthly jump—1.1 per cent—during April.

Dr. John Young, head of the prices and incomes commission, said in a Calgary speech Tuesday, before the latest consumer price index was announced, that only barely-discernible signs of success in the fight against inflation have so far been achieved.

WANTS SCALE DOWN

He called for a big scaling down of wage and salary increases. They have been running eight to nine per cent a year, and Dr. Young said an increase of only four per cent woul be compatible with a 2.5 per cent annual increase in productivity and the goal of stable prices.

In his lexicon, stable prices would be an annual rate of increase of 1.5 per cent. This is less than one third the rate of increases which has been prevailing in Canada.

DBS said higher home ownership and accommodation costs, and higher clothing prices were mainly to blame for the March increase in consumer prices. Food prices declined because of lower prices for beef, pork, eggs, potatoes, carrots, cabbage, celery, milk, bread, cake mixes, and some breakfast cereals.

Rents were higher. So were prices of new houses, and costs of house repairs. Quebec electricity rates went up, as did telephone raes in some parts of Nova Scotia.

Clothing prices rose at the termination of midwinter sales.

Greek Regime Denounced

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — The ministerial committee of the Council of Europe charged the Greek military dictatorship today with violating 10 articles of the European Convention on Human Rights. It called for the restoration of fundamental human freedoms in Greece without delay.

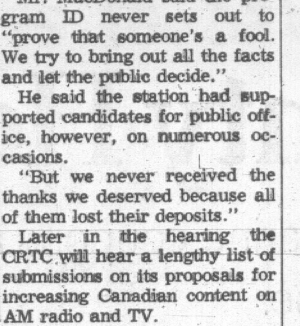

Fifteen of the 17 ministers on the committee endorsed a 1,000-page report accusing the Greek regime of suppressing human rights and torturing political prisoners as a matter of government policy.

France and Cyprus abstained.

Greece walked out of the Council of Europe last December to avoid being expelled and renounced its ratification of the Human Rights Convention. But the withdrawal provision of the convention requires six months' notice, and Greece's renunciation is not effective until June 12.

Tories See Uncontrolled Power In New Grain Grading Proposal

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative speakers claimed in the Commons Tuesday to have spied yet another thrust towards uncontrolled power by the government in the form of new grain-grading regulations contained in a sweeping revision of the Canada Grain Act.

The grain bill, later given second reading and sent to committee, has been described by Agriculture Minister H. A. Olson as an effort to give Canada greater flexibility on the world wheat market.

It would permit the government to introduce a protein-rating system for wheat, making the Canadian product more competitive among protein-conscious customers in Europe and Japan. At present grain standards are written directly into the Canada Grain Act.

The bill also would reconstitute the board of grain commissioners as a new and more powerful grain commission with increased controls over the movement and marketing of grain.

The Conservatives, while not denying the need for a new grading system, protested the plan to remove control over grain standards from the jurisdiction of the Commons itself.

TOO MUCH POWER

Gerald Baldwin (PC—Peace River) claimed the bill would give excessive power to the new commission and the agriculture minister in re-classifying grain. They would be able to use the power without proper checks to protect the interest of producers and would be able to extend their authority to seed wheat and other grains, he said.

Stan Schumacher (PC—Palliser) said that the bill, "apart from removing control of grain-grading from this chamber to the executive" also will bring under unjustified control most other aspects of the wheat economy. It would do little, he said, except "encourage a great expansion of bureaucracy."

Gordon Ritchie (PC—Dauphin) claimed that the government's argument for flexibility did not mean ultimate authority should pass from Parliament. Since the Canada Grain Act was passed 40 years ago, he said, all changes in grading have been given ready approval.

Jack Horner (PC—Crowfoot) complained that introduction of a protein-grading system, however commendable, conflicts with the government's wheat reduction scheme. The scheme is to encourage farmers to move land into summer-fallow this year but, Mr. Horner said, wheat grown on the land next year will have a low protein content.

Arnold Peters (NDP—Timiskaming) called on the government to promote creation of an international grading system to enable farmers to grow wheat acceptable to all customers. Meanwhile, he said, he would like to know what the world market wants in terms of protein content.

'Leaders Must Learn To Live With Hostility'

QUEBEC (CP) — A gathering of some of Canada's top executives and university administrators was told Tuesday night leaders will have to learn to live with hostility in the 1970s.

Prof. Warren G. Bennis, vice-president for academic development at the New York State University in Buffalo, said the hostility that began in the 1960s will continue to accelerate.

Mr. Bennis spoke at the evening session of Canadian executive management day at Laval University.

More than 400 executives from the private and public sectors, including Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, attended.

Mr. Bennis said there will be about 10,000,000 university students in the United States in five years—there now are 8,000,000. Many were revolutionaries and rebels.

They are spearheading changes in society and breaking down traditions sacred to the older generation, he said. They were also moving from technology and turning toward the social sciences.

Mr. Bennis discussed the necessity for future administrators to give greater consideration to the human element in society.

The present conflict in the United States is not simply between blacks and whites or the rich and poor, he said.

It was between the culture and the values of the older generation and the counter-culture of the young people whose purpose was to turn old traditions upside down.

The conflict was between property rights and human rights, war and violence, the consumer and producer.

Mr. Bennis expressed concern about the forces working against the authority, needed to hold the fabric of society together.

PLAYHOUSE MAY CLOSE UNLESS GRANTS MADE

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council Tuesday decided to grant $20,000 to the Playhouse Theatre Company— as long as the federal and provincial governments grant another $105,000 between them.

The theatre company said last week it needed $125,000 from the three governments to cover a working capital deficiency. Without it, said president Ed Finnigan, the theatre will have to fold.

The 40-member board of directors is to meet Thursday. It has offered to cut costs by $130,000 if it can get help from the city, $65,000 from the Canada Council and $40,000 from the B.C. Cultural Fund.

Wives Demanding Report On Tug Safety Be Released

VANCOUVER (CP)—About a dozen wives of tugboat operators and deckhands demonstrated outside the federal department of transport offices here Tuesday protesting the government's refusal to release findings contained in a recent survey of conditions aboard the tugboats.

Alfred Poole, vice-president of the Seafarers International Union, said the women took the action on their own initiative.

"They're the wives of members of all three unions involved on this coast and they're worried about the safety of their husbands," he said.

"I think they are right. If the government refuses to release the survey findings, it would seem they're trying to hide something."

Members of the Seafarers, the Canadian Merchant Service Guild and the Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers have been urging the government to release the findings of a survey made into the seaworthiness of West Coast tugs and conditions aboard the vessels.

The CBRTW accepted a contract proposal from the B.C. Towboat Owners Association last December. The Merchant Service Guild is now conducting a vote of its 1,120 members on whether to accept a conciliation board recommendation for a 10 per cent increase over two years.

Mr. Poole said the SIU, which earlier had asked the federal labor department to bypass conciliation hearings and allow a strike vote, has been notified conciliation hearings will proceed under chairmanship of George W. Rogers.

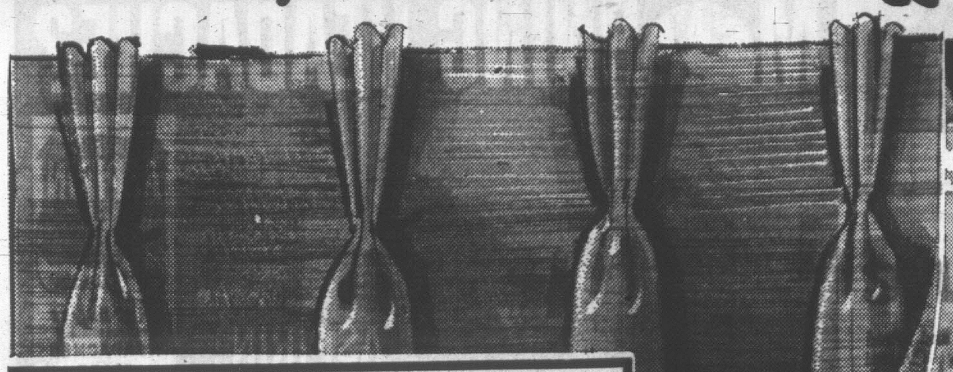

About 280 Seafarers members earlier rejected a proposed contract to replace one which expired last October.

Beatle Split Said Fault Of Yoko Ono

LONDON (AP) — The biographer of the Beatles says the major cause of the breakup of the pop quartet appeared to be John Lennon's marriage to Japanese artist Yoko Ono.

"If there was one single element in the split I'd say it was the arrival of Yoko," said Hunter Davies, author of The Beatles, an Official Biography.

While he was writing the book, Davies was an intimate confidant of the Beatles.

Writing in The Sunday Times, Davies said that after Lennon and Yoko got together "the rest of the Beatles didn't matter any more." Lennon and Yoko were married in Gibraltar in March of last year.

Long rumored differences among the Beatles came out in the open in the statement from lead singer Paul McCartney that he is splitting from the group — and "time will tell" whether it will be temporary or pemanent.

Davies said that since the Beatles hadn't performed together in person since 1966, McCartney's statement "was pretty pointless."

Davies said under Yoko's influence, Lennon began taking charge at Apple, the Beatles' business headquarters, and this "was a blow to Paul's pride.

"Paul fell by the wayside and . . . they were no longer bosom buddies . . . George and Ringo are not exactly dotty over Yoko either."

With Yoko, Lennon has mounted campaigns for world peace, held zany art exhibitions, made radical movies, formed a world rock band and issued non-Beatle records. None of these activities included McCartney, George Harrison or Ringo Starr, the other Beatles.

So far Lennon, Harrison and Ringo have kept silent about McCartney's breakaway.

Despite the breakup, another Beatles record is to be issued next month, and Davies said Apple had another 12 hours of recorded material to be released.

VICTORIAN WINNER AT FESTIVAL

A major winner at Vancouver Kiwanis Music Festival is Victoria bassoonist Alan Denike, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Denike, 3610 Kathleen Street.

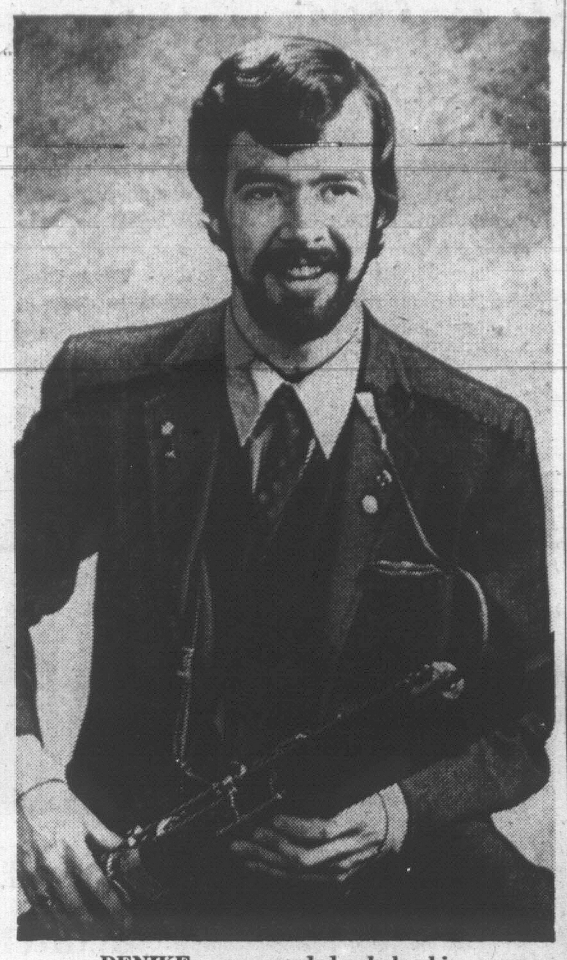

Monday night he was awarded the $200 scholarship presented by the Vancouver Symphony Society Women's Committee.

Alan won the open basson class, receiving a mark of 92 for his performance of the Bach unaccompanied Sonata in C Major.

He then went on to win the championship class for orchestral instruments, competing against the top winners from 25 classes.

Playing the Vivaldi Concerto in E minor, he was awarded 93 marks by Dr. Ward K. Cole, head of the department of music at the University of Calgary.

Alan is one of the Victorians selected to play in the 1970 National Youth Orchestra and is principal bassoon with the Victoria Symphony Orchestra.

CAPITAL REGION AID SOUGHT

Disposal Problems Aired

The metropolitan board of health underlined two waste disposal problems Tuesday and called for help from the capital region board to solve them.

Senior health officer Dr. J. L. M. Whitbread said nothing has been done to solve the problem of people dumping garbage by the roadside when they find the Hartland Road dump closed on weekends.

BECOMING URGENT

"I feel the problem is becoming urgent now," he said. The health board accepted his recommendation that the regional board be asked to take over responsibility for disposal of waste.

On the same theme, Whitbread said there is a need for a garbage disposal site to serve the area west of Esquimalt and that it should be open on weekends.

The regional board will be asked to deal with both points as well as consider an answer for another disposal problem — where to dump sewage collected by truck from septic tanks.

FIVE COMPANIES

L. E. Benham, assistant director of environmental services, said there are five companies, some with several trucks, now handling septic tank cleaning.

About 100 truckloads a month are being dumped on a Millstream Road site. In the winter when the water table rises there's trouble keeping the waste dammed, he said.

A more suitable solution would be to have the trucks dump into a sewer near an outfall.

The regional board will be asked to investigate suitable siting for such an operation.

In other business, the board approved asking Health Minister Ralph Loffmark for a meeting to review the formula for financing health services on a regional basis.

Sensational New Hearing Aid Costs Less Than 10 Cents Per Year To Operate

Space age technology has come to the hearing aid industry. A new hearing aid has been developed that actually costs less than ten cents per year to operate. This is a far cry from the $25 to $70 a year the average hearing aid costs to run. Aid also automatically controls speech interfering noises and can be custom adjusted for correct hearing on the spot. University Students Eyed by Institute

The training program of the Chartered Institute of Secretaries is being developed in order to appeal to full-time university students rather than articled students.

Speaking at a dinner meeting of the Victoria chapter Monday in Holyrood House, Lloyd Jenkins of Toronto, the institute's national executive director, said "We found there was a growing interest by young people in the administrative or managerial role, both in business and government.

"As a result, our training programs are being developed at the teaching institutions to appeal to students fully occupied in completing educational programs."

FIVE YEARS

He added that the institute would still have a responsibility toward articled students.

A professional organization of executive administrators, the CIS sets 13 examinations. When these are completed students receive a licentiate diploma. They are given full membership after they have established their professional competence through five years of experience.

Jenkins said that the CIS, after merging with the International Corporation of Secretaries April 1, has more than 50,000 members and nearly 30,000 students.

He stressed the international portability of a CIS diploma, explaining that the institute was able to offer summer and permanent employment to students in 52 countries.

Everett Brown, who is provincial chairman, said that in B.C. the CIS course has been established as the academic qualification for certification as a municipal administrative or finance officer.

Brown, who recently retired as deputy minister of municipal affairs, suggested the local group set up a membership committee to help students.

Ken Smith, assistant deputy minister of municipal affairs, was meeting chairman. Smith heads the local chapter.

Also at the head table were Jim Baird, deputy minister of municipal affairs; and Fred Durand, clerk for Central Saanich and the group's clerk treasurer.

High Intelligence . . . But They Fail

EDMONTON (CP) — Robert and Richard, seven-year-old identical twins, have above-normal marks on intelligence tests—yet they failed kindergarten two years in a row.

They are bright and handsome, can talk incessantly about Neanderthal man, every variety of dinosaur, the constellations and almost any other subject that would baffle most adults.

But they can't draw a figure 9. They see their letters back to front. They want to try to read from the bottom of the page to the top or from right to left.

Their problems are multiple and complex. They have minor brain damage, and unless they receive the help they need their problems will get worse and lead to deep emotional problems.

Fortunately, during their second year of kindergarten, the principal of the school arranged for an assessment of the boys and they were transferred to a special school for children with language and learning development problems.

MEASLES CAUSED IT

Evelyn Unger, director of the Evelyn Unger School for Language and Learning Development, explained that the twins' brain damage resulted from a rubella (measles) syndrome during the mother's pregnancy.

"They are exceptionally intelligent," she said. "But they have a visual difficulty in perceiving space."

The teachers in the school will try to help the children develop an understanding and a "directionality pattern" so they can do things in the usual manner.

"We like to get the children very young, before they develop the wrong patterns."

About seven to 10 children in every 100 may have these learning disabilities to some extent, although not to the extreme of the twins, Mrs. Unger said. Many of them can get on in the normal school system—"if the teacher has the time and if she understands the problem."

Because these children often are intelligent and they may even respond better than usual to speech, many persons tend to ignore or underrate the problem.

"They're inclined to think the child is lazy, or not trying or is misbehaving."

PARENTS CONCERNED

In Robert and Richard's case, the parents were concerned from an early age because of the children's constant and frenzied activity. Despite a constant search for medical advice and help the parents were continually reassured that the twins were normal—"just a little over-active."

Robert (or was it Richard) was doing one exercise he has practised repeatedly to help overcome his problem. He focused his eyes on a star drawn on the blackboard, then with the chalk grasped in both hands he drew squares over and over, saying out loud: "Up, across, down and in."

When he was finished he looked up at Mrs. Unger and said: "I know I'm a lot smarter than any Neanderthal man."

Mrs. Unger explained that the twins' greatest fear is failure—they've lived with it for so long.

"They become very cunning to cover up their doubts, and that was his way of 'tuning out' just in case he failed."

She explained that because the children have received the help they need, they will be able to return to the regular school system in another year or two.

"But it is important that they are recognized early and that they get the help they need," she said.

SUB CREW RESCUED?

LONDON (UPI) — British military sources said Tuesday most and probably all crewmen survived the sinking of a Soviet nuclear submarine southwest of Land's End, England. Most of the crew of 88 were apparently taken aboard a Soviet merchant vessel before the submarine went down Sunday in "very deep water." Others scrambled aboard the ship when they saw repairs were not working.

Millions Toothless in Britain

By CY FOX

LONDON (CP) — Some 13,000,000 persons over the age of 16 in England and Wales have lost all their natural teeth, says a newly published government report.

This number is equivalent to 37 per cent of the population over 16. But almost half the adult residents now missing their own teeth had lost them before the state-run National Health Service began operating in 1948.

The service made dental care available for the first time to millions of Britons who previously had been able to afford only extractions and, at a stretch, replacement of lost teeth with false ones.

The cost of dentures, even before 1948, was substantial.

"But people seem to have regarded such expenditure as a final outlay which ensured that they would have no more dental trouble," said a government statement issued with the new report.

VARY BY REGIONS

The document was prepared for the health and social security department by government experts working with a team from the dental school of London Hospital's medical college.

They found significant differences in dental health among the various regions of England and Wales.

In southeast England, 72 per cent of residents over 16 have some of their natural teeth compared with 66 per cent in the Midlands and East Anglia.

The percentage for Wales and the southwest is 57 while that for northern England is 54.

Accounting for the contrast between the state of teeth in the southeast and the north, the report noted that the area around London has many more dentists in relation to population size than does northern England.

The London region has one dentist for every 3,000 people while the ratio up north is one for every 6,000.

Southeasterners in the 16-to-34 age group were "slightly better disposed" towards regular attendance at dentists than the corresponding age group among northerners.

The report warns that "if decayed teeth are not filled, they will eventually become unrestorable and will have to be extracted."

Persons who have never had restoration work done on their teeth will find themselves depending on dentures much sooner than Britons careful about regular dental checks and filling jobs, said the report.

WORSE AMONG WOMEN

With the difference in the number of dentists available as between north and southeast, the southerners "are likely to suffer total tooth loss later and to a lesser extent than those living elsewhere," the survey says.

It also found tooth loss "worse among manual workers . . . and slightly worse among women than men."

"The proportion of women who have no natural teeth is generally higher than the proportion of men, for all social classes," the report added.

It warns that "so long as the distribution of dentists remains uneven . . . there is likely to remain a regional difference in regular attendance and consequently a regional difference in dental health."

Canadian to Stage 6½-Hour Play on Nazism

LONDON (CP) — Canadian playwright George Hulme has finished a marathon theatrical study of the growth of Nazism in Germany, commissioned by the Canada Council four years ago.

Hulme, 38, a native of Orillia, Ont., recently achieved his first West End production with a comedy called The Lionel Touch starring Rex Harrison. But he describes his study as, "the most important thing I've ever done."

He now is looking for a non-commercial company and a director to undertake the massive production. It would run about 6½ hours and require a nucleus of 35 actors to play its 90 to 100 characters — some players doubling roles.

Hulme has tentatively titled the work The Life and Death of Adolf Hitler. The actor covers roughly the life-span of the Nazi leader and examines the "roots of hatred" in Hitler's personality from which Hulme believes the Nazi philosophy sprang.

COVERS PRESSURES TOO

The play also encompasses the general development of Germany in Hitler's lifetime, with all the political, economic, religious and psychological pressures that found scapegoats in the Communists and the Jews.

Few theatres in Britain or North Ameria are equipped to undertake a venture of this scope.

In Britain, it would be restricted to the Royal Shakespeare Company, the Bristol Old Vic and Chichester, a playhouse modelled on the theatre-in-the-round at Stratford, Ont.

In North America, probably only Stratford, Ont., and New York's Loncoln Centre would have the facilities for a production of such size. But Hulme hopes there may be some interest in European countries, too.

"In spite of all the difficulties, I'm confident it will be done," said Hulme.

VICTORIA MUSIC FESTIVAL

Adjudicator Floored By Pint-Sized Duo

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Two young string playing prodigies from Vancouver and four richly-talented Victorians illuminated the day for adjudicator Murray Adaskin at Tuesday's musical festival string sessions.

"I never in my life heard anyone so young play so well," he commented of 10-year-old violinist Gwen Hoebig and her eight-year-old cellist brother, Desmond.

They had just played a duet for which he had awarded his highest mark — 95.

"When I first heard this young violinist this morning it took me three minutes to pick myself up from under the table," he said.

'SHEER DELIGHT'

"Tonight I was prepared for the impact . . . it was sheer delight."

In the first major competition of the festival, Adaskin awarded the valuable Congress of Strings scholarship to Jacqueline Tarry for her performance with Robin Wood at the piano, of the Brahms A Major Violin Sonata.

Jacqueline Tarry had played beautifully, in perfect tune, with style, grace and elegance, he commented.

Runner-up was cellist Bruce Turkington who played an unaccompanied Bach Suite.

"I'm a great admirer of Bruce Turkington," Adaskin commented; "especially for his composition. On Monday night I heard his work for an unusual ensemble — two violins and two cellos — and I don't think I've ever been hit so hard.

Adaskin was also delighted with two other violinists — Nancy Meredith and Stephen Calder — both of whom topped their respective classes with the same mark, 89.

He faced his most difficult decision in adjudicating a chamber ensemble class in which three enchanting young trios appeared.

SENSE OF REFINEMENT

Pianist Wendy Stofer with Stephen Calder and cellist Joyce Menting played a Haydn Piano Trio and Gwen and Desmond Hoebig with pianist Janet Wilson played a Beethoven Trio.

"In these trios the pianist carries most of the weight," Adaskin commented. He was high in his praise of Wendy Stofer's performance and said that her trio had had a sense of refinement that was rather special.

He solved his dilemma by tieing this group with the Hoebig-Wilson ensemble by giving each 90 marks.

The third group, also piano-violin-cello, consisting of Heather Pidcock, Mark Destrube and Gary Russell, playing a less sophisticated piece, won praise for their musical sense and good intonation and were awarded an 87.

First of the musical festival's several major events occurs tonight at Central Junior Secondary auditorium with the colorful dance honor performance.

Dance classes ended Tuesday afternoon and out of some 50 public and private school entries adjudicator Marcia Snider has selected 16 groups to repeat their performances this evening.

Also performing will be the University Folk Dance Club.

Cultivating Delphinium Cuttings

By HILDA BEASTALL

The cultivation of delphiniums drops off every few years and for a while these fine perennials are scarcely seen locally. Apart from raising batches of seedlings and then selecting the best plants when they put up the first spikes, there is the method of propagation from cuttings.

Hilda

This is a good way when a plant shows just the characteristics which make it absolutely perfect for your garden, since you will quickly be able to have several plants exactly like the parent.

Division of the root may result in perhaps only two or at most three plants after a year's growth from seed, whereas cuttings taken may give you a half dozen.

The method of taking delphinium cuttings is basically the same as for chrysanthemums or phlox. If you have succeeded with either of these, no difficulties should be met.

First look for the shortest new growths at the base of the plants. This spring, growth has been early and rather quick, so that you may find only three or four growths short enough to use.

They should be not more than three inches in length since delphinium stems become hollow when longer and will not form roots.

Take a sharp knife; remove each cutting with a thin piece of the solid stock at the base of the stem.

Trim off the lower two leaves carefully so as not to damage the growth bud just at the junction of leaf and stem. Then place the cuttings in a circle around the edge of a four-inch clay pot filled with a mixture of sand and fine peatmoss, thoroughly dampened and firmed.

The mixture should cover the bottom two growth buds, and the leaves will be just clear of the mixture.

A plastic bag can be used to retain moisture in the pot and the cuttings during the rooting period, or a glass jar can be inverted over the cuttings.

If the latter method is used, the jar must be raised and the collected moisture removed each day, or fungus trouble will commence on the cuttings.

At this time of year, rooting should take about 10 days if the cuttings are kept in a warm light place around 70 deg. F.

Transfer to a sandy soil mixture in separate pots as soon as roots form. Keep shaded and warm for a day or two, then gradually out to a cold frame or other sheltered place outdoors to become fully established before planting into the garden in May.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

As all players know, bridge is strictly a partnership game. Even if one were to read and master all the bridge books that were ever written, he would not become an expert, for the essential partnership rapport will still be lacking. The following anecdote, by analogy, illustrates this contention.

A young man who was an excellent automobile mechanic was driving in the left-hand lane when, without warning, he made a sharp right turn and almost crashed into another car.

"Why didn't you signal," bellowed out the other driver.

"Don't be rediculous," came the reply, "I always turn at this corner.

The deal diagrammed today, which came up in a rubber-bridge game, serves as an example of a partnership understanding that wasn't there.

Neither side vulnerable. South deals.

NORTH
♠ A 7 2
♡ A K 6
◇ 9 6 5 3
♣ 8 7 4

WEST
♠ 5
♡ Q 10 8 5 2
◇ Q 7 4
♣ J 10 9 2

EAST
♠ 8 3
♡ J 7 4
◇ A K J 10

SOUTH
♠ K Q J 10 9 6 4
♡ 9 3
◇ 8 2
♣ 5 3

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠	Dbl.
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♣.

When play had ended, South had gone down a trick, losing two clubs and two diamonds. Had North not raised to four spades, perhaps East would have doubled anyway, and, if West then passed, South would have scored a game.

South criticized North for the four spade bid—and, according to the books, South was right. An opening three bid, not vulnerable, announces the possession of six winning tricks: if vulnerable, the preemptive three bidder says that he is exactly three tricks short of what he has bid; if vulnerable, two tricks short.

This principle—called the Rule of Two and Three—is based on the assumption that a game is worth approximately 500 points. Therefore, if an opening three bid is doubled, and the original bidder goes down three tricks, he will lose 500 points, the mathematical equivalent of the game that the doubler's side could have made; and down two, doubled and vulnerable, would also cost 500 points.

But, evidently, North was not familiar with this "book learning"; and, presumably, he thought South's opening three bid showed seven or eight winning tricks.

All?" Harry asked. "I thought you had more."

FLASHBACK ON CANADA

Early River Boats 'Walked' on Land

By BOB BOWMAN

April 15, 1859, was a milestone in the development of western Canada because Captain Anson Northrup began operating his stern-wheeler ship "North Star" between points in Minnesota and Fort Garry. It marked the end of the Red River cart trains between Fort Garry and St. Paul. The new service made it possible to travel between present-day Winnipeg and Montreal in 14 days because there was a railway between St. Paul and the east.

When the "North Star" began operating on the Red River its name was changed to "Anson Northrup" and its first trip was sensational. The captain kept blowing the ship's whistle and people rushed to the river banks to see the strange monster churn by, belching smoke and sparks. Some people cheered: others dropped to their knees in prayer.

The "Anson Northrup" soon had competitors, and then other ships began services on the North and South Saskatchewan Rivers. They reduced the cost of transportation across the prairies. The charge for freight in the overland carts had been five or six cents a pound, but the steamers carried freight from Winnipeg to Prince Albert for three cents, and four cents to Edmonton. Yet the journey by water was much longer because the rivers have so many bends. The cart trail from Winnipeg to Brandon was 150 miles, but it was nearly 500 miles by the Assiniboine River.

Most of the prairie river boats had very short lives because they were wrecked. They were almost amphibious. When General Middleton went out to fight the North-west rebellion he wrote: "On the 5th of May the long expected steamer arrived after a tedious voyage, most of which seems to have been made on land. All the steamers are stern-wheelers and have four strong spars fastened, two on each side of the bow. The spars are lowered when the vessel runs on a shoal, or sandbar, and the vessel is forced over: made to walk, as it were."

Other events on April 15:

1612 — Sir Thomas Button sailed from England to search for Norhwest Passage. He discovered Manitoba via Hudson Bay.

1672 — Royal edict prohibited fur-traders from going to Indian villages.

1694 — Montreal hospital received royal patent.

1814 — Three warships were launched at Kingston, Ont.

1834 — British House of Commons was warned of possible revolution in Canada.

1861 — Joseph Howe proposed union of British North American colonies.

1896 — Federal government withdrew remedial bill re Manitoba separate schools.

1904 — New railway bridge collapsed at Saskatoon.

1904 — Coal miners went on strike in Alberta and eastern British Columbia.

1928 — Famous Canadian flyer "Duke" Schiller discovered German aircraft lost in Labrador.

YOUR HEALTH

Fussing Over Low Cholesterol Diet

By DR. WALTER ALVAREZ

During the past 30 years or so, I must have read dozens of articles by experts who advised men, and especially men with a tendency to disease of the arteries of the heart, to try to keep the amount of cholesterol in the blood low, perhaps under 250 milligrams.

I was so impressed with the several studies that for many years I now have rarely touched butter, I take but little cream, and I never eat the fat on meat, or foods that contain much shortening; this constitutes a low-cholesterol diet. Fortunately vegetable oils seem to be safe to eat.

★ ★ ★

Along the way I read results of research that cheered me; one able physician said that his studies showed that a man can safely eat four eggs a week without causing his blood cholesterol reading to go up. Also, I read recently the results of a study which showed that after the age of 60 years, a low cholesterol diet no longer affects the level of cholesterol in the blood.

This gave the researchers the impression that after 60, dieting may not be important. One expert wrote that perhaps some of us start ourselves on the road to getting too much blood cholesterol when in our childhood we drink quarts of milk and perhaps eat much fat.

My advice to a cholesterol-conscious wife who wants to take good care of her elderly husband is not to fuss at him at each mealtime.

★ ★ ★

In "Geriatric Times" I read that many corporations are now reluctant to employ men and women over 40. As the writer says, in opposition to this idea are such facts as that George Washington was 57 when he became first U.S. president; Napoleon was 57 when he became Emperor of France; Abraham Lincoln and Robert E. Lee both were over 50 at the beginning of the Civil War; Charles Darwin was past 50 when he gave the world his great book on evolution; John Milton was 60 when he wrote "Paradise Lost"; Daniel Defoe was past 60 when he produced "Robinson Crusoe"; Winston Churchill became England's great prime minister when he was 65; Benjamin Disraeli assumed that position for the second time at 70; Gandhi became leader of India when he was 78; Benjamin Franklin was a very useful citizen when he was 80. These men and countless others did not reach their prime until after they were 40, hence why today should me be so fussy about employing a 40-year-old person?

★ ★ ★

One of the ablest men I ever knew was the great Clinic, Dr. Broders. He was retired, like everyone else, at 65, but he then looked about 55 and was invaluable to the Clinic. But at 65, out he had to go. He went to another great clinic and worked there magnificently for another 10 years before he died.

PARADE BAN LAW ILLEGAL

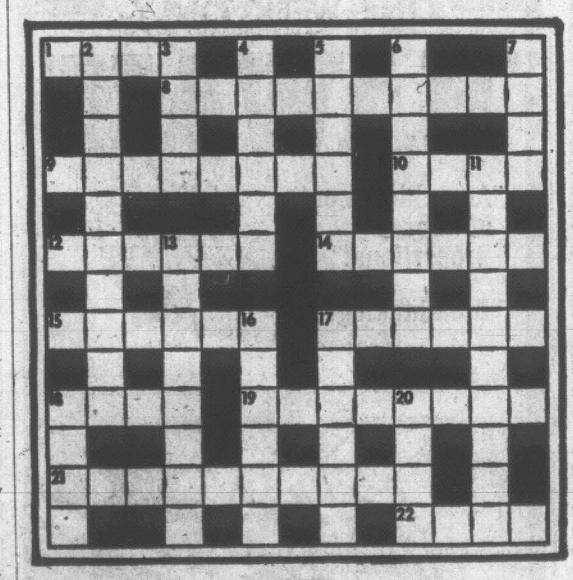

MONTREAL (UPI) — The city bylaw enacted last November giving the city police director power to ban any demonstration he thought might lead to trouble was ruled illegal and unconstitutional Tuesday by a Montreal social welfare court judge, who said it contravenes "the basic rights of freedom" guaranteed by the British North America Act.

Woman Gets Crack at Shakespeare

LONDON (AP) — A leggy brunette with the unlikely name of Buzz Goodbody is becoming the first woman director of the Royal Shakespeare Company, and she confesses: "The prospect is frightening."

Just two years after graduating from Sussex University, Miss Goodbody at 23 is to direct King John, one of Shakespeare's most difficult works, in June at Stratford upon Avon.

In the Bard's early productions women weren't even allowed to play women. Now Buzz is going to run the show.

"I am aware that I will not only be under surveillance from the normal critics and audiences, but those who think women aren't much good at this sort of thing," she says.

"Actors simply aren't used to women directors. But all this will change as more women come into the theatre from the universities.

"I believe in equal pay and equal opportunity for women. Women should become judges, engineers and anything they want to become."

Buzz, originally named Mary Ann, got the nickname from her brother John because she was always buzzing around. Now she uses "Buzz" as her preferred name.

Her father, Douglas Goodbody, a wealthy lawyer, sent Buzz to Britain's most exclusive girls' school, Rodean.

Tonight's Top Television Shows

BASEBALL. 6 p.m., Channels 2 and 6. Tonight is the first of 15 Wednesday-night baseball telecasts, and it sees the Montreal Expos and St. Louis Cardinals clashing in the Cardinals' home camp. Hal Kelly and Don Drysdale report this live telecast.

★ ★ ★

ENGLEBERT HUMPERDINCK. 7:30 p.m., Channel 8; 10, Channel 4. Elke Sommer, the Four Tops and comedian Carl Ballantine are the guests. Engelbert sings Gonna Build a Mountain, This Guy's In Love With You, Bridge Over Troubled Water and Spanish Eyes.

★ ★ ★

NOTE TO READERS. As a result of the crisis with the Apollo 13 moon mission all times listed are subject to change without notice. Because the mission was aborted, telecasts planned for this evening have been cancelled but all networks will be breaking into regular programming with periodic news bulletins.

★ ★ ★

THE VIRGINIAN. 7:30 p.m., Channel 5. "The Drifter." (Repeat). A down-to-earth western plot makes this story, vintage 1964, believable. A range war finds the Virginian (James Drury) working against his future boss, Judge Garth, and he's as dour and honest as ever. For a bonus, pretty Mariette Hartley appears, and she looks splendid, particularly in color.

THE COURTSHIP OF EDDIE'S FATHER. 8 p.m., Channel 4; 9 Channel 6. "Bully For You." (Repeat). A cute idea, and well presented on this pleasant series. Eddie has trouble with a school bully who keeps bopping him, and the bully happens to be a blonde tomboy named Joey. Eddie's father invites Joey to dinner and between Mrs. Livington and him, Joey learns a few things about the fair sex. Jodie Foster plays Joey in a very straightforward and effective manner.

★ ★ ★

ROOM 222. 8:30 p.m., Channel 4. "Our Teacher is Obsolete." (Repeat). Good entry, and one that deals with a real-life situation which could happen in high school. It's the case of the old-fashioned teacher versus the hip substitute in a class called "preparation for marriage." Veteran teacher Miss Tandy (Helen Kleeb) has to turn over her class for a day to counsellor Liz McIntyre (Denise Nicholas), and the usually quiet, bored students burst into a free-swinging discussion. Naturally, when Miss Tandy returns, she has a problem on her hands, and it takes her the rest of the episode to handle it.

★ ★ ★

MEDICAL CENTER. 9 p.m., Channel 12. This series does its best with a good guest performer, and tonight it's Sharon Farrell's turn to spark the hour. She plays a teaching assistant who wants sterilization. which requires a bit of digging into her background by our own Doc Gannon. Miss Farrell's character earns sympathy readily because of her miscarriage problems and her presence, along with Tom Skerritt as her husband and Lane Bradburys' Maggie, make it an interesting case.

TONIGHT'S MOVIES

5:30, Channel 12: Excuse My Dust (1951 comedy), Red Skelton, Sally Forrest, Macdonald Carey. Amusing Skelton comedy about the days of the "horseless carriage."

8 p.m. Channel 7: A Face of War—Documentary. A stark portrait of marine involvement in South Vietnam.

8:30, Channel 8: The Small Back Room (1949 English drama), David Farrar, Kathleen Byron, Jack Hawkins. A research scientist has problems both in his work and his home life—interesting drama.

9:30, Channel 7: She Wore a Yellow Ribbon (1949 western), John Wayne, Joanne Dru, John Agar. Rugged commander of a cavalry outpost makes an attempt to drive invaders north. Excellent production by John Ford.

11:40, Channel 2: The Enchanted Cottage (1945 drama), Dorothy McGuire, Robert Young, Herbert Marshall. Sensitive drama about two people who find love in their mutual unhappiness.

12:01, Channel 6: The Small Back Room—See above.

Construction Near Normal

Construction work generally continued at near normal pace today despite lockout by 600 B.C. contractors against seven building unions.

Pickets did not appear at building sites, allowing those trades not locked out to continue their work.

Locked out are laborers, bricklayers and helpers, tunnel and rock workers, operating engineers, cement masons, teamsters and heat and frost insulators.

LIMITED TIME

Spokesmen for several contractors said, however, that the other trades will only be able to continue work for a limited time without the locked out trades.

Ed Phillips, Victoria manager for the Amalgamated Construction Association, said jobs are experiencing "some disruption" which are liable to escalate.

On the mainland, work halted at some sites, particularly those at the cement-pouring stage, but trades not affected by the lockout continued on the job at most projects.

A spokesman for the B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council, representing unions, said there would have been a widespread shutdown regardless of the lockout because of a shortage of cement.

The shortage stems from a dispute between the Teamsters Union and the province's two largest cement producers, Lafarge and Ocean Cement.

ABSURD DEMANDS

The president of the Construction Labor Relations Association, C. J. Connaghan, said the lockout is designed to show the companies are "all through with light-hearted negotiations."

He said the association has been presented with contract demands ranging from "the unreasonable to the absurd" — from 40 per cent to 105 per cent in wages. The CLRA offered 14 per cent.

In the Victoria area, H. E. Fowler and Sons said work is "next to a standstill" at the city swimming pool. Laborers are locked out which "in turn means carpenters can't work so they are laid off, so the job stops."

E. J. Hunter and Sons said men are still working on the Gordon Head swimming pool in Saanich "at this moment — but I can't say for how long."

WORK SLOWED

Dominion Construction was unable to provide a progress report on the Hillside shipping centre, but work has slowed down on the Toronto-Dominion Bank building and in a couple of weeks is expected to halt.

A and B Construction of Nanaimo, working on the $1.6 million University Heights Shopping Centre in Saanich, said unaffected tradesmen are continuing work "but we can't go much longer."

Farmer Construction said laborers are locked out at the University of Victoria biological sciences building and a project at the Royal Oak Shopping Centre but carpenters are still working. It was thought that work can't go on "for too long."

Work was still proceeding at Cana Construction's Glendale Hospital and Duncan courthouse sites.

Three large projects in Victoria whose contractors don't belong to the CLRA are the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Building; Michigan Street high-rise apartment; and West Park limited dividend housing tower, View and Quadra.

The CLRA's Connaghan said negotiators would hold themselves available to continue contract talks with unions.

Carpenters, whose contract expires at the end of this month, were scheduled to meet with CLRA Monday but talks broke off when only two association representatives appeared.

Meanwhile, B.C. Welfare Minister Phil Gaglardi said locked out men don't qualify for welfare but do for unemployment insurance.

He was corrected by federal Health and Welfare Minister John Munro who pointed out that welfare applies to anyone in need. Unemployment insurance is not paid in labor dispute situations.

Well-Known Pioneer Dies at 73

Mrs. Ethel Gertrude Ball, 73, mother of one of Victoria's best-known families, died Sunday in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Born at Cobar, New South Wales, Australia, Mrs. Ball was the widow of Charles Edward Ball and lived at the family home at 76 Menzies Street.

She came here more than 60 years ago.

Her son, Edward Charles, is a member of Victoria Fire Department and was president of the provincial command, Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans' Association.

His brother, Stanley, is president of Victoria unit No. 12, Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans. Ernest is employed by Northwestern Creameries with his younger brother, Gordon.

Mrs. Ball leaves three daughters, Mrs. Florence Henderson, Calgary; Mrs. Doreen Bryant, Victoria, and Mrs. Shirley La Roux, Campbell River.

Also surviving are 20 grandchildren; one great grandchild; two brothers, Stan and George Cross, Victoria; and a sister, Mrs. Edith Pawsey, Victoria.

Rev. Bruce Molloy of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church will conduct funeral services in McCall Brothers' Chapel Friday at 2 p.m.

Scientists Determining Ocean 'Slope'

VALPARAISO, Chile (CP) — The Canadian oceanographic vessel Hudson sailed southwestward Tuesday to begin surveys along the 150th line of longitude that will help space satellites survey the world's oceans later in this decade.

Put together, the ocean and space data will enable scientists to determine accurately for the first time the amount of "slope" there is to the sea.

Under the different circumstances, ocean surfaces tilt over a wide area and in what scientists are confident is a measurable degree.

The Hudson, which had a week's reprovision and rest period here, will make complicated measurements along the 150th west longitude for the next seven weeks, starting near the antarctic ice and sailing northward to just off Alaska.

These measurements will be used to frame an ocean equivalent of the landsman's mean sea level, dubbed an "equipotential surface".

MEASURE GRAVITY

Dr. Richard T. Haworth, who heads the Bedford Institute's resource survey group at Halifax, and five other scientists are measuring the earth's gravity at one-minute intervals to a high degree of accuracy along the 150th parallel.

Only with the aid of the Hudson's computers can the program be undertaken because of the massive amounts of data required to make each calculation.

When the United States puts up an oceanographic satellite, possibly by 1975, the Hudson's data should provide the world's first equipotential surface along a north-south line through most of the Pacific.

The satellite will collect data that will provide precise knowledge of the space vehicle's height above sea level as it moves over the Pacific.

FLASHING LIGHT LEADS TO UNDERWATER DROP

CHICAGO (UPI) — Somebody stole the bright red station wagon of 10th battalion fire chief Richard Josepka while he was at a fire. The car was found later in Lake Michigan off suburban Evanston. A security guard of Northwestern University spotted the vehicle's flashing red light in the water.

Sudden Pressure Rise Before Capsule Blast

HOUSTON (WP) — "It's just as if a giant Thermos bottle broke."

That's the way flight director Glynn Lunney Tuesday described the sudden explosion in one of the cold-storage oxygen tanks that crippled the Apollo 13 spacecraft Monday night and forced its emergency return toward earth.

"Something really physical happened," said Lunney, tired after more than 12 straight hours in mission control at the Manned Spacecraft Centre here.

"It appears that something in the cryogenic tanks gave way, causing a problem with the fuel cell. It was probably a physical impact of some kind."

Space officials here still don't know what caused the impact, but they have ruled out speculation that the spacecraft was hit by a meteorite.

The spacecraft's two tanks for cryogenic or super-cold oxygen supply the oxygen that combines with hydrogen for a high-heat chemical reaction in the fuel cells to provide electrical energy for the spacecraft.

They are about the size of basketballs and built like Thermos bottles, explained Clint Burton, the electrical, environmental and communications systems flight controller. They have a narrow vacuum space between two layers of thin but strong walls.

The tanks, manufactured by the Beech Aircraft Corp. of Wichita, Kan., are located in the service module bay 4, behind and below the spacecraft commander James Lovell's seat on the left hand side of the command module.

GAS, PARTICLES

The astronauts, Lunney said, spotted gas and particles vented from the service module through the No. 1 window, which is also on the left side.

Burton pinned the problem down to cryogenic oxygen tank No. 2, which he said had a sudden increase in pressure that dropped to zero within seconds, at the same time the astronauts reported "a loud bang."

His chart showed that at exactly 10:06 Monday night that tank registered a normal 930 pounds per square inch of pressure. Then, he said, "something caused it to go up, up, up."

Within a minute — by 10:07 — the pressure had shot up to 1,008 pounds per square inch. This is 6 pounds per square inch above the pressure at which some oxygen will leak out of a relief valve.

But small amounts of oxygen didn't vent out the relief valve, Burton said. Instead, he said, "within seconds it dropped to nothing" — 19 pounds per square inch.

"It had to be a rupture in one of the tanks," Lunney said.

Woodward Widow Dies; Rites Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — Funeral services will be held here Thursday for Marion Louise May Woodward, widow of Percival Archibald Woodward, British Columbia merchant and philanthropist.

Mrs. Woodward, born in Indian Head, Sask., and married there in 1916, died in Vancouver Monday. She was 77.

Her husband, who died Aug. 27, 1968, was honorary vice-president of Woodward Stores (Vancouver) Ltd.

With his brother, the late former lieutenant-governor W. C. Woodward, he developed the pioneer business that started when their father, Charles Woodward, opened a store in Vancouver in 1892.

It was estimated that between 1955 and the time of his death P. A. Woodward donated more than $5,000,000 to various charities, mainly in large gifts to hospitals in British Columbia.

Many of his donations were made through the Mr. and Mrs. P. A. Woodward Foundation. Bigcest single gift was $3,500,000 to the University of B.C. in April, 1964, to complete a health sciences centre at the university.

Mrs. Woodward was also active herself in charity work and among her main interests were the cancer clinic, many children's organizations and women's auxiliaries to Vancouver General Hospital and Shaughnessy Hospital.

CP Transport spokesmen said the new terminal has 10 highway trailer doors and 18 doors for pick-up and delivery trucks. A rail spur into the plant is served by two boxcar doors.

The staff of 62, including 43 warehouseman drivers, are headed by terminal manager Charley Derban.

Hitler Waged His Own War With Tax Men

By LAWRENCE FELLOWS

BONN (NYT) — Among all the other things, it turns out, Adolf Hitler was a tax dodger.

It was not a secret that the Fuhrer, a man whose resolute nature has been well documented, had an aversion to taxes. Through all the years before the Nazis gained power in Germany, Hitler fought the tax collector over every pfennig.

It was also known that in 1933, after two years in office as Germany's Chancellor, Hitler was declared exempt from taxes.

But it has only now been discovered, in a search of musty, hidden records of the West German Finance Ministry, how hard Hitler fought and how many ruses he used to outmanoeuvre the tax collectors for those two uncertain years.

SPENT WEEK

In 1933, before he had spent a week in office, he had chipped away at the Finance Ministry sufficiently to win exemption from income tax on all the perquisites and allowances that he got on top of his 60,000-mark salary. Every Chancellor before Hitler, through the whole history of the Weimar Republic, had paid these taxes.

The record was pieced together by Alfons Pausch, historian for the West German Finance Ministry, when bits of information about Hitler turned up unexpectedly while he was searching documents for a histroy of the Ministry's last 50 years.

Hitler pursued his war with the tax collector relentlessly, according to Pausch, using one ruse after another and, when all other means failed, by simply dragging his feet.

Hitler won an exemption on the income tax on his salary for a year on the understanding that he would donate his salary to the widows and orphans of the S.A. and S.S. men, the Nazis's Stormtroopers and the Elite Guard. After the first year, he kept the exemption and his salary too.

ROYALTIES

Hitler ran into difficulty while trying to have the tax dropped on royalties for his autobiography, "Mein Kampf."

He won a lower assessment on his earnings for 1933 but never paid his taxes. The Munich tax bureau sent him five dunning letters but all went unanswered. A prosecution notice was prepared as a matter of form, but the whole matter was dropped on March 12, 1935, when Hitler's name was erased from the tax register.

Fishermen Questioned On Needs

VANCOUVER (UPI)—A survey of the continuing education needs of fishermen is being conducted by the University of British Columbia on a grant from the federal fisheries department.

The UBC extension department said Wednesday 1,000 questionnaires have been sent to fishermen across the province to determine what areas of study and training they consider most important.

Some of the areas listed include oceanography, fish biology, marine hydraulics, salmon development projects, international laws, fisheries insurance, marketing and economics.

WHERE'S WINNIE PORTRAIT?

LONDON (CP) — Questions are being asked again about the whereabouts of a controversial portrait of the late Sir Winston Churchill, presented to the then prime minister by Parliament in 1954.

Churchill and his family are reported to have disliked the picture by Graham Sutherland, who was made a member of Britain's Order of Merit in 1960.

Preliminary studies for the portrait now are in the Beaverbrook Art Gallery at Fredericton.

Like the finished picture, they show Churchill in a somewhat less genial light than is the case with other portrayals.

The portrait was presented to the war leader on the occasion of his 80th birthday and has not been seen publicly since.

Even in 1954, there were conflicting opinions about it, ranging from admiration to sharp criticism.

Sutherland has done portraits of Lord Beaverbrook and other famous personalities during his career.

WORLD INTERESTED

The Evening News says the Churchill portrait has never been offered for exhibition despite worldwide interest in putting it on show again.

The London newspaper quotes Lord McLeavy, chairman of the committee which organized the presentation, as saying the painting's future lies entirely in the hands of the Churchills.

"But he is disappointed that it should seem to have been banished from public view," The News said.

Churchill's grandson, journalist Winston Churchill, was quoted as saying he had no idea where the picture is. Mrs. Christopher Soames, a daughter of the late British leader, merely says her mother "has it somewhere."

A news inquiry to the private secretary of the former prime minister's widow brought the reply: "I don't think Lady Spencer Churchill would like to talk about it."

Mines, Mills Main Concern

VANCOUVER (CP) — The federal fisheries department is taking steps to cut down pollution of main waterways by the mining and forestry industries, Fisheries Minister Jack Davis said Tuesday.

Mr. Davis told the British Conference that during the next week sharpened teeth will be put into the Fisheries Act. He gave no details.

Mining companies will have to take steps to purify effluent, he said, and the forest companies, which had made great strides along this line, would have to do even more.

Mr. Davis said it may take a few prosecutions to bring about observance of the anti-pollution measures.

Poor Dominate Quick Marriages

By NAN ROBERTSON

WASHINGTON (NYT) — One-third of all first-born children in the United States from 1964 through 1966 were conceived out of wedlock, a government survey has disclosed.

Hastily arranged marriages gave many babies legitimacy by the time of their birth, but one out of every seven was born illegitimate during that period.

These were among the major conclusions of an extraordinary report from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare based on a solid sampling of one out of every 1,000 first births in those years. It was the first attempt in this country to obtain national estimates of extramarital conception, according to Mrs. Mary Grace Kovar, a leading analyst for the division of vital statistics.

The study, conducted by the National Centre for Health Statistics, pointed up a connection between income and pregnancy at the time of marriage.

More than 37 per cent of women in families earning less than $3,000 a year went to the altar pregnant. A shade more than 8 per cent from ing $10,000 were expecting when married.

Forty-two per cent of the married women under 20 had been wed less than eight months when their first baby was born.

The size of the sample was 11,331 first births out of 1.1 million in the U.S. annually from 1964 through 1966. Statistics are being gathered for more recent years, but the data have not been tabulated.

Those who took the last survey said there was no way to predict now whether newer figures would show more, less or the same number of illegitimate babies. They cited as imponderables the effects of the birth control pill and increasing sexual freedom.

The survey also found that when mothers were classified by level of educational attainment, the highest proportion of births to women married less than eight months was among those with one to three years of high school.

"Approximately 32 per cent of these women had been married for less than eight months as compared with 21 per cent who had not gone beyond elementary school, 21 per cent who had graduated from high school but had not gone to college, 18 per cent who completed one to three years of college and 7 per cent who were college graduates," the survey said.

Mrs. Kovar, the vital statistics analyst, said she could not give "any sociological answer" as to why this should be so. "I just don't know," she added. "The median age at first birth is higher for those with only an elementary education than for those with one to three years of high school.

The latter are "younger, therefore they married younger. I can't tell you why they did what they did," she said.

Tensions Ease In Sudan

BEIRUT (The Manchester Guardian) — The 10-month-old military regime now ruling the Sudan is relaxing for the first time since it came to power.

The mood follows the failure last month of an anti-Khartoum rebellion and the death of the only serious contender for power, Imam Hadi El-Mahdi, descendant of the Mahdi who fought Gen. Charles 'Chinese' Gordon of Khartoum.

Signs of Prime Minister Jafar El-Numeiry's new found confidence in his position were detectable this week in a number of actions.

He announced an amnesty for the inhabitants of Aba Island, some 200 miles south of Khartoum on the White Nile, which was the focal point for the Mahdi-led insurrection last month.

Numeiry said he pardoned all the islanders with the exception of fugitives and anti-government leaders under interrogation. He took this action, he said, after they had submitted a memorandum pledging allegiance to his regime.

RESUME TOUR

Next Numeiry let it be known he planned to resume his tour of the White Nile area, interrupted when a member of the Ansar sect — the three-million-strong religious group led by Mahdi — tried to stab him. Numeiry hastily returned to Khartoum as the uprising broke out in widely-separated areas of the Sudan.

The White Nile was the strongest pocket of resistance, however, and reports from travelers said the government strafed Aba Island with MiG jets and bombarded it with artillery before the troops took it by storm. The toll of dead among the Ansars was said to be in the thousands.

Officially, Mahdi was shot dead while trying to escape over the border into Ethiopia, though subsequent reports have claimed he was killed on the island.

NOT A THREAT

The leaderless Ansars were no longer expected to pose any serious military threat to the stability of the regime.

To insure this, Numeiry has announced that no new election of an Ansar head will be permitted. "The revolution will not allow the emergence of new Khalifates," the command council said. And it deported Mahdi's Oxford-educated nephew, Sadek El-Mahdi, to Cairo, apparently in case he had any ideas of succeeding his uncle.

MASSACRE VICTIMS in Cambodia float down the Mekong River in what is believed to be the largest mass killing of Vietnamese citizens, yet revealed in Cambodia. Government leaders, who recently deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk, have been whipping up a campaign against the 600,000 Vietnamese civilians who live in Cambodia as well as against N. Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in the country. (AP Wirephoto).

IN CAMBODIA

Hundreds Massacred

Viets Tied, Shot

NEAK LEUNG (AP) —The bodies of hundreds of Vietnamese floated down the Meking River in southeast Cambodia today, many with their hands tied behind them. It appeared to be the biggest mass killing yet revealed in Cambodia.

A police official at the Neak Leung ferry crossing 36 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, said he had counted 400 bodies this morning.

But still they come, and more could be seen for a mile up the river, until it disappeared around a bend.

The stench was overpowering, and passengers on the ferry gagged as the boat moved through the bodies.

Some women were among the slain. Most were men clad only in black shorts. One group of eight bodies, including one woman, floated by tied together.

Cambodians along the bank including the police said they had no idea where the bodies came from.

WHIP UP HATE

The government leaders who deposed Prince Nordom Sihanouk have been whipping up an anti-Vietnamese campaign directed not only at the thousands of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops who operate back and forth across the border with South Vietnam but at the 600,000 Vietnamese who live in Cambodia.

The Khmer people of Cambodia and the Annamites of Vietnam have been traditional enemies for centuries, and government planes dropped leaflets in Phnom Penh Saturday reminding the people of a historic massacre when "the Khmers once rose up and killed all Annamites on Cambodian territory in one night."

At least 73 Vietnamese who had been rounded up in the town of Prasaut for security checks were killed there last Friday, and according to available evidence Cambodian troops were the killers.

'CAN'T ACCEPT' ARCTIC STAND

WASHINGTON (CP) — The state department said today the United States "can neither accept nor acquiesce in" the recent Canadian assertion of Arctic and territorial-sea jurisdiction.

In particular, the statement said, "we are concerned that this action by Canada, if not opposed by us, would be taken as precedent in other parts of the world, for other unilateral infringements of the freedom of the seas."

The statement was issued by State Secretary William Rogers.

"For the reasons indicated earlier, the United States cannot accept the unilateral jurisdictional assertion and we have urged the Canadian governmnet to defer making them effective while co-operating in efforts promptly to reach internationally-agreed solutions."

In Ottawa, informed sources were quoted Tuesday as saying Canada would reject, firmly but politely, the U.S. complaint.

Prime Minister Trudeau and U.S. President Nixon had one telephone conversation about three weeks ago concerning Canada's jurisdictional claims.

Today in the Commons External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp denied reports that the United States has threatened economic sanctions against Canada in the diplomatic note.

Sharp said he favors making the note public to dispel these rumors from U.S. sources.

RUSSIA OFFERS HELP IN APOLLO RECOVERY

MOSCOW (Reuters)—Soviet Premier Alexei Kosygin offered President Nixon today all possible assistance in recovery of the Apollo 13 astronauts and said two Russian ships have been ordered toward the splashdown target area in the Southwest Pacific.

The Soviet news agency Tass said the Russian leader had sent a message expressing official "concern" about the stricken moonship.

Nixon asked Britain for assistance in the two standby splashdown areas in the Atlantic and Indian oceans and was given a quick promise of support.

Crippled Apollo 13 Weaving Off Course

Times News Services

HOUSTON — The crippled Apollo 13 spacecraft, limping back to earth today with its three weary astronauts, was slightly off course and pitching erratically, while Mission Control sought to allay fears that the service module is disintegrating.

James A. Lovell, Fred W. Haise and John L. Swigert were hoarding their vital oxygen, water and power supplies and they have no margins left for error, but space administration officials still believe they will be able to land safely in the Pacific early Friday.

Fears that the service module may now be breaking up began Tuesday night when Haise, on watch while the other two slept, spotted a four-inch square piece of metal floating by the module. He also reported a stream of vapor exhausting from somewhere on the service module.

MAIN ENGINE

This led to speculation at the Manned Spacecraft Centre here that the module, which contains the main engine and other key equipment, is breaking up.

But an agency spokesman said: "Even if it was, it wouldn't matter. It's not important anyway . . . they could jettison the service module now."

However, the Apollo 13, rocked by a mystery explosion Monday night which aborted man's third moon mission, was pitching and yawing when Lovell relieved Haise on watch this morning.

The yawing and pitching was believed responsible for throwing the spacecraft off course, necessitating a mid-course correction tonight or early Thursday.

MISS THE EARTH

If for any reason the firing, which will be done with the lunar landing module engines, is not successful the spaceship will miss the earth by 104 miles and probably go into a remote orbit from which there would be no escape for the three men.

Their meagre supply of oxygen would be exhausted in a matter of a few days, long before they would approach earth again closely enough for a landing attempt.

There is little reason to believe the lunar module's big descent engine will not function properly, however; it has already fired twice, making vital course corrections, since Monday night when an oxygen tank ruptured, cutting electrical power and rendering the command module virtually useless.

Since then the three men have been reduced to almost total dependence on the power attached lunar landing craft.

Flight Director Eugene Kranz said today the lunar module is in excellent shape and "I think it's fully capable of getting the crew back. I feel we are much better off than we were last night as far as consumables and everything is concerned."

The astronauts will ride the command ship through the atmosphere to a planned splashdown near Samoa in the Pacific at 10:04 a.m. PST Friday, some 46 minutes later than earlier estimated by the sapce agency.

Because of the possibility that tropical storm Helen, now about 500 miles away, might be in the recovery area, Mission Control told the astronauts it might delay a final course correction until Thursday afternoon.

The fragile lunar lander, now manned by Haise and Lovell, will be jettisoned, along with the service module, shortly before the spacecraft re-enters the earth's atmosphere for splashdown.

Haise and Lovell will rejoin Swigert in the command capsule Odyssey shortly before the jettisoning procedure.

Death Still Follows Their Every Movement

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

Between now and splashdown, the Apollo 13 astronauts still must accomplish several crucial tasks, using a disabled command craft and a sort of jury-rigged lander.

These tasks are the bare minimum for safe return.

They must first follow a true and correct trajectory toward the slot in the earth's atmosphere which they must enter Friday for landing. This could mean one or more firings of the lunar module descent engine to adjust the course.

In the past these have always gone well. But now there are special problems.

The main guidance decisions are made on the ground from information fed into computers by tracking antennas. But the guidance system on the spacecraft, fed ground directions, must also work.

At Massachusetts Institute of Technology Tuesday night — at the celebrated instrumentation laboratory — a 30-

B-B Body Backs Third Language

OTTAWA (CP) — The royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism recommends that languages besides English and French be taught in Canadian elementary schools where sufficient demand exists.

The commission says in its fourth report, tabled today in the Commons by Prime Minister Trudeau, that this might mean eliminating some parts of the basic curriculum "and would therefore entail a deliberate choice by parents and school authorities."

It takes as its man premise that "public education systems should provide courses that will assist the various cultural groups in the maintenance of their languages and cultures."

It suggests that languages other than English or French also be used in the schools as the languages of instruction in some cultural subjects.

The commission's report says the definition of what constitutes sufficient demand for the teaching of languages other than English and French should be left to provincial education authorities.

REPORTS TO OTTAWA

Though education comes under provincial jurisdiction, the commission's report is to the federal government, which appointed it in 1963.

Trudeau said recently that the commission finished its work March 31 but that some of its reports remain to be edited and printed. The fourth report is entitled The Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups.

The report is based on 1961 census figures now nearly a decade out of date. The next census will be taken in 1971.

The commission says more advanced instruction and a wider range of choice in languages other than English and French and related cultural subjects be provided in public high schools where demand is sufficient.

It says there are at least 60 languages of significant groups in Canada, though the main ones, other than French and English, are German, Italian, Ukrainian and Dutch.

The report emphasizes that the learning of third languages in school should not be carried on at the expense of public support for learning the second official language, French or English.

Arabs Storm U.S. Embassy

By The Associated Press

Arab demonstrators stormed the U.S. Embassy in Amman, Jordan today, then tossed a bomb into the American Cultural Centre.

First reports said there were a number of casualties.

At the embassy, windows were smashed and offices ransacked. Three embassy vehicles were wrecked.

Demonstrators hauled down the U.S. flag from its staff on the roof and ran up the Palestinian colors in its place.

It'll be th' most welcome splash-down in history.

Wines Hit Hard In Price Hikes

By BRUCE YEMEN

While one major proposal of the Morrow Liquor Commission was going into effect today, another was going down the drain.

The provincial cabinet approved price increases on 65 items sold by the Liquor Control Board in direct opposition to the royal commission's recommendation for a two-year price freeze on alcoholic beverages.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said the increases and decreases reflect changes in the price paid by the Liquor Board for the products, and there is no change in the mark-up by the board.

"You'll find our mark-up is the lowest in all Canada," he said.

The cabinet order was released about the same time as 19-year-olds were being allowed to drink alcoholic beverages for the first time in B.C. — as was recommended by the commission.

A FEW STARTLING

The price increases generally were in the 10- to 25-cent range but a few were more startling.

Most of the increases hit imported wines, brandies and other already expensive lines.

The Morrow Commission's complaints about "gouging" of B.C. wine drinkers by the LCB were apparently unheeded by the cabinet which hiked the prices of 28 French wines.

EIGHT DECREASED

There were total of eight price decreases for a bran dof Canadian wines (Andre's), but nine were also increased.

One of the few Canadian liquor brands to rise was Seagran's Crown Royal which jumped from $7.60 to $7.90 for a 26-ounce bottle.

ADD 39 ITEMS

The cabinet order today also added 38 items to the list of products sold by the LCB, including 17 Canadian wines, seven Canadian liqueurs, five Canadian gins and one imported Scotch.

It also makes available for the first time, 12-ounce bottles of Canadian vodka.

One of the largest increases on French wines was for Chablis white which jumps from $2.90 to $4.60.

Beaune red goes from $3.80 to $4.70, Beaujolais red from $2.75 to $3, Pommard Red from $6.15 to $7.30, St. Julien from $3.30 to $3.45 and Medoc from $2.25 to $2.35.

WHERE ARE THE FIRST 30?

Another Otter Colony Urged

A suggestion that 30 sea otters, to be obtained from Alaska this summer, be releasel in coastal waters between Port Renfrew and Bamfield was made today by naturalist Freeman King.

The 50-mile coast with its life-saving trail, along with Long Beach and the Effingham Islands, in Barkley Sound, will become a national park this month.

King said the otters would provide an added attraction for hikers and outdoorsmen walking the wilderness trail between Port Renfrew and Bamfield.

"The habitat there appears to be suitable for otters," he said. "There are plenty of kelp beds, rocky shelves and caves."

He also felt the animals would be well protected under the watchful eyes of hikers and the Carmanagh lighthouse keeper.

The B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch is working with Alaska for the transfer of the sea otters from Amchitka Island in the Aleutians — site of underground nuclear tests.

James Hatter, director of the B.C. Wildlife branch, said today no decision has been made as to where the fur-bearing mammals would be released.

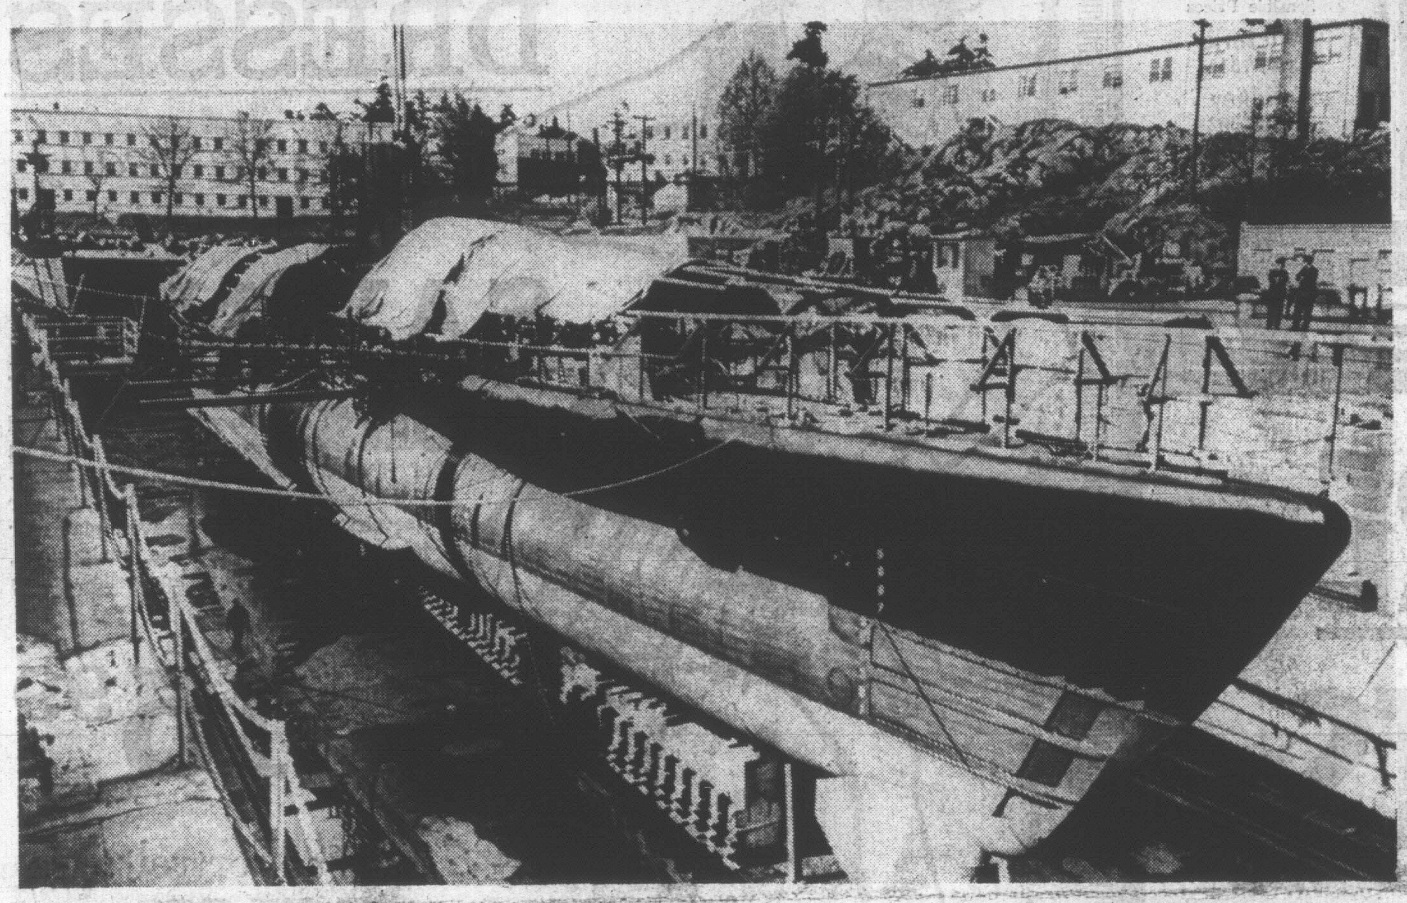

Sea otters, exterminated in B.C. waters at the turn of the century, were reintroduced to coastal waters last summer.

Thirty were released in an isolated place near Nootka Sound on the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Since then, however, none have been seen.

PWA Prepared To Join Triangle Route

Air Canada plans to abandon its 33-year-old Victoria-Seattle service and offer new service to the mainland in conjunction with Pacific Western Airlines, a company spokesman said today.

An announcement here by Air Canada regional sales manager William Garven and PWA executive manager of sales and traffic Alexander Wellburn, both of Vancouver, confirmed that PWA has made application to the Canadian Transport Commission to participate in the Victoria-Vancouver-Seattle passenger service.

If the application is approved — August at the earliest and likely September — Pacific Western would begin flying the Vancouver-Victoria-Seattle route with four return trips per day using Convair 640 turbojets, a 50-passenger aircraft comparable with the Viscount now making three flights daily for Air Canada.

Air Canada would withdraw from the Victoria-Seattle leg of its service.

Approval of the CTC and the U.S. Civil Aeronautics Board is necessary.

Air Canada said the required legal notices would be published Thursday and that interested parties would have the opportunity to approve or oppose with 30 days. The CTC air services committee has the option of holding public hearings into the application.

EIGHT DAILY

Air Canada would continue to fly eight trips daily between Victoria and Vancouver and one non-stop Victoria-Calgary flight daily.

The government-owned carrier said it had agreed to the PWA application after being satisfied that standard of service would continue or improve.

The bid is made under authority of federal government policy broadening regional air service, which was described last August by Transport Minister Donald Jamieson.

PWA ranks as Canada's third airline, after Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Airlines. It handles the second largest total of air freight and logs flights over 11,000 route miles in B.C., Alberta and the Northwest Territories. It also flies considerable overseas charter mileage.

There will be no change in the fare schedule, Wellburn said.

Stan Mooney, Air Canada district sales manager, said about 125,000 passengers a year are boarded at Victoria.

Garven said Air Canada still proposes bringing in DC-9 jet aircraft for the Victoria-Vancouver and Victoria-Clagary service, but Wellburn said PWA does not expect to match this with its own Boeing 737 jets, which are of comparable size.

TENNIS SERVED UP

For the first time, Saanich will provide tennis instruction for adults.

The instruction will start April 30 and will be offered every Thursday evening and Saturday morning for six weeks.

Registration will take place at Reynolds Park, Reynolds Road and Cedar Hill Cross Road, from 6 to 7:30 p.m. this Monday and Wednesday. Timetables will be available on registration.

It's Easy To Quit —For $10

Victoria's new health education centre is under way in a cloud of smoke.

The smoke is from the centre's first program, a five-day quit smoking course, which ends Thursday.

The course has 14 people enrolled and at least that number are signed up for a second course beginning April 26. Tom Bradley, one of the centre's founders, said today the second class will easily reach 20 to 25.

"This class is very enthusiastic and finding real help," he said of the first group. The course uses a buddy system and "it's almost so simple (to quit) they can't believe it."

Bradley, who is administrator at Rest Haven Hospital, said it was initially planned to run the course every other week but it now appears there will be a demand for more frequent classes.

The centre, at 3019 Shakespeare, opposite the Hillside Shopping Centre, was opened last week.

Shunned Liner Creeps Away

With neither pilot nor tugs to assist, the 250-passenger cruise ship West Star steamed cautiously from the Inner Harbor at 1:30 this morning, her departure delayed some 3½ hours by pickets from the Seafarers International Union.

Shipping agent George Dawson today said the ship's owners, Westlines of Seattle, believe the SIU picket endangered their ship and are considering legal action against the union.

"They instructed their Vancouver lawyers to apply for an injunction but nothing could be done last night."

The SIU says Westlines have been getting rid of Canadians on their ships, replacing them with foreign crews. The union says this represents a threat to workers in the B.C. shipping industry.

★ ★ ★

The pilots, members of the Canadian Merchant Service Guild, supplied a man to bring West Star into the Inner Harbor, about 8:30 p.m., but honored the picket line when time came for departure.

Tugboats did the same.

And while city and visitors bureau officials were on hand to greet the ship, first of several cruise ships that will visit Victoria this year, they little benefitted the 111 disembarking passengers.

For one thing, taxis stayed away from the picket line which was set up beside the old CPR ferry terminal on Belleville Street.

And the bus drivers, members of the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers, refused to handle the passengers' baggage.

A truck was finally rented, but it was 1:30 before West Star had finished and could get out.

FAVORS GOVERNMENT CONTROL

Pollen Backs Belleville Purchase Bid

Ald. Peter Pollen said this morning he will back a Capital Improvement District Commission bid to bring CPR property along Belleville Street under government control.

He was commenting on a letter received at city hall in which the CIDC asked Victoria city council to investigate ways and means of acquiring waterfront property adjacent to the Canadian Pacific Railway pier "either by the city or the provincial government."

The CIDC is an advisory group sponsored by the provincial government and designed to provide some planning advice in the capital city area.

'EXPLOITATION'

CIDC chairman J. Everett Brown asked that the city investigate the possibility and present an estimate "of the probable costs involved" to his group.

Said Pollen: "I'm all for it if it can be accomplished." "I've been for it all along. I don't think that area should be given over to commercial exploitation."

At present Marathon Realty, the real estate development arm of CPR, has commissioned architect John A. Di Castri to design a scheme compatible with the city's design wishes for the area.

Pollen said today he is still unsure of Marathon's final intent.

"The last scheme they put before us was ludicrous," he said.

That was the scheme that stopped city council in its tracks two weeks ago and convinced members that the entire Belleville Street issue should be tabled until a better plan was provided.

In a second letter to city council, CIDC chairman Brown said "the commission regrets that the city took the steps it did recently in approving the waterfront development adjacent to the CPR pier."

City Manager Dennis Young noted tersely that the commission was poorly informed.

"We didn't approve the CPR plan, we tabled the whole thing until they could come up with a development we could support," he said. "And we told Marathon that until they came up with a plan we could all approve we would withold our support for various leases they require for a continuing operation."

TRADE SUGGESTED

On the CIDC proposal that the property involved by purchased by the province or the city Young said government ownership should be approached cautiously.

"You would have to decide first whether you wanted an active area around the Inner Harbor or whether you wanted a sterile area," he said. "Personally I'd prefer a little activity, but that would have to be a council decision."

Pollen suggested a trade with Marathon.

"They have a new docking facility, but no lease. They have a building on property they don't own, a building erected without a building permit; and they have no way of hooking up their sewers without crossing city land.

"Maybe we could agree to throw our support behind their new dock, provide them with what they want if they will give us the adjacent property." (Which would include the old CPR terminal.)

In addition to asking the city to check our prices and the possibility of acquiring the Belleville Street waterfront property, CIDC has asked for representation on the city's proposed harbor advisory committee.

The committee has not yet been formed but is expected to be comprised of Pollen, and fellow aldermen Cecil Parrott, Clyde Savage and Harold Olafson.

Knife Brawl In Cafe Described

An early-morning cafe brawl in which two men were knifed was described in Victoria county court today.

Shirb E. Gilbreath, 26, was charged, before a jury of two women and eight, men with wounding Peter Lindley and John Charles Andrew in Paul's Drive-In Restaurant, 1900 Douglas, around 2 a.m. Saturday, Jan. 10.

Crown Counsel Cecil Branson said the accused got into a dispute with Lindley and Andrew in the cafe. The premises were crowded and there was much confusion. But witnesses saw Gilbreath waving a four-to six-inch knife and shouting "Move on, move on."

Subsequently Andrew and Lindley were taken to hospital bleeding from wounds.

The trial continued this afternoon.

PERHAPS THERE ARE French-Canadians still who look for a political messiah to solve Quebec's troubles. But Liberal Lesage who fathered the quiet revolution ended near-eclipse with retirement, and no miracle-workers appear on the list of party leaders who will contest the April 29 provincial election.

Bourassa, the Liberal federalist who stresses the creation of jobs as his top priority, offers logic but is unlikely to sway the rural vote.

Rene Levesque, the prophet of independence, still makes friends for his Parti Quebecoise, and not merely among the anti-Establishment young. He touches the heart, he draws wild applause, but it may be that economic stability is now a more compelling dream than separatism.

The Union Nationale under Premier Bertrand is for all its failures, formidable. I expect it will be returned to muddle along with a holding operation while the massive provincial debt grows heavier and discontent deepens.

We can hope that French Canada will work out its destiny within Confederation. We can also be glad that Quebec is blessed with men whose commonsense is proof against doctrinaire eloquence and the demogoguery that confuses issues.

One of these men is Gerard Filion, president of Montreal's Marine Industries Ltd., and a former editor of the French-languate daily, Le Devoir.

Last November, in a speech to Montreal Chamber of commerce, Filion laid home truths before Quebecers in terms that few French Canadians have employed before him.

The Montreal Star printed the address in full — a procedure rarely followed by metropolitan dailies whose space is at a premium. Even though almost half a year has elapsed since the industrialist spoke his mind, some of his utterances are worth reviewing.

Filion saw a Quebec that has undermined its quiet revolution.

"We let ourselves be carried away by magic words," he said, "by high-sounding, empty phrases, by promises made a hundred times and broken a hundred times. It is not necessary to demand that our politicians be geniuses, but simply that they not take themselves for geniuses.

"This mania for grandeur which has engrossed our Quebec politicians since 1960, this prestige policy which leads our minister of education to go strutting around Naimey or Paris when our schools are on strike, is sheer Don Quixote-ism."

But the trouble as Filion sees it is by no means all with the politicians. Quebecers must revise economic thinking that has not advanced since the black years of the Depression. In an era of multi-national corporations, they continue to think small.

Canada's least solvent and heaviest-taxed province still remains on the fringes of the western technological world. It reserves the place of honor for the professional man, and after him for "that vaguely definable category of those who are generally termed intellectuals."

Again and again, Filion scores the Quebecer's lack of enthusiasm for business and primary industry on the scale his province requires and for his harping on exploitation of the province by Ottawa.

"How could Ottawa take more money from us than from other parts of the country," he asks, "when our gross provincial product is 10 per cent lower than the national average and 27 per cent less than that of Ontario?"

He finds French Canada abounding with intellectual games designed to find who is responsible for its ills. "The conquest" invariably gets the blame.

"For 200 years we have lamented the loss of a battle. Since the Plains of Abraham we have forgotten nothing and learned nothing."

Filion would have his people abandon the morbid delusion that they are the victims of all who speak English. He would also have them learn that "they will take their place in every mileau by their work and by their competence. Nobody will bow before them because they are of the French language, because they are bilingual, because they yell loudly or because they smash windows."

Most of all, he wishes for them the quality that produces strong men and strong peoples — a will to success.

"If we don't have it," he warns, "no matter how much we go into the streets, set off bombs, proclaim French unilingualism, separate Quebec only to link it up again with the rest of Canada, we will remain snivellers and ragamuffins."

A harsh summing up. But one that if heeded would go farther toward solving Quebec's problems than provincal election, federal paternalism or even a changed Canadian constitution.

NFB Changes Instructions And Offers Film Free Again

National Film Board headquarters informed its Victoria office this morning that films are again available to the public — and free of charge.

In January, the NFB began charging rent on its films, then, March 4, banned rentals.

Local representative Peter Grant says the change of policy is an interim measure until the Saumier Report is received. Andre Saumier, assistant deputy minister of regional economic expansion, has been asked to recommend film policy.

Grant said bookings for films will only be made from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. although the office will be open for film returns and other business all day.

SHOPPING GUIDE

Charlie Stays Cool To Grandma's Gift

By PENNY SAVER

Our neighborhood handy-girl, Charlie (who is secretly saving to buy a horse), was weeding our front border when the telephone rang.

"Is Charlie there?" asked her mother. "I hate to interrupt her while she's working, but her grandmother just arrived in town. She's only here for one day and will be very disappointed if she doesn't see her granddaughter."

The next day when Charlie arrived to continue with the weeding, I asked how her visit with Grandma went.

Charlie just shrugged.

"She hugged and kissed me and kept talking about how much I'd grown and who I looked like. Usual grandmother stuff. Oh, and she brought a present."

"Well? Was it a nice one?"

Charlie shrugged again.

"A doll." The scorn in her voice was so typical I almost laughed. "And a sit-on-the-dresser doll at that. It looks like Prince Charles."

I must have visibly pricked up my ears because she added, "She got it in town somewhere. Mom would know more."

Charlie's Prince Charles doll is one of a line that includes dolls wearing native costumes or dressed as historical figures. Prices begin at $3.95 and go as high as $25.

The $25 dolls include the Prince Charles model (so much for Charlie's scorn. That gift was a royal one in more ways than one) and another of Queen Elizabeth.

Caernarvon Ceremony

Both dolls, whose faces are carefully modelled to resemble their real-life counterparts, are costumed for the investiture at Caernarvon, the Queen in a yellow suit and the Prince in ceremonial robes.

Other dolls include Henry VIII's wives as well as costumed representatives of many lands.

"Mother is always giving things like that," Charlie's mother told me. "She herself loves collecting. It solves the gift problem wonderfully. All we do is send her pieces of a set on special occasions.

"Right now we're working on some little china rabbits."

These little rabbit figures really are cute.

Beginning at $3.50 a figure and ranging up, they show the bunnies at various tasks. Most I saw, however, were napping.

Such things as a table with a tasty looking pie, are also sold so the figures can be set up to form little scenarios.

Please call 382-3131 between 9 a.m. and 12 noon if you would like to know where to find these items.

Shelves Arranged To Enhance Room

By PAULINE GRAVES

Books and albums warm up a room as almost nothing else can. They testify to your interests and character, and the jackets, usually in rich tones, add variegated color, achieved in no other way.

Books go on shelves, of course, so the trick is in arranging the shelves to enhance your room, rather than just stacking them one upon the other.

For instance, in this room, by decorator Ione McMillen Keenan, the shelves stretch across the wall, leaving an alcove framed by base cabinets and shelves on each side. The alcove is wide enough to take a sofa if need be, but that is the most obvious furniture placement.

Instead, two chairs and ottomans and a square table with a large lamp fill the space, making it a sort of instant library or reading corner. And it functions well for conversations also.

If you are adding on a family room, or remodelling, give a thought to this idea.

Combining base cabinets with open shelves provides concealed storage for cluttery items, as cameras and games, and anchors the units. Open shelves are made of one-by-eights, except for the cabinets which are twelve inches deep.

Planned for magazines and albums, the shelf that tops the alcove has a slanted back and a strip of molding one inch back from the edge that keeps the periodicals from sliding onto the floor.

THE BETTER HALF By Bob Barnes

"Any one will do except that one that looks like Uncle Edgar."

SEW SIMPLE

By EUNICE FARMER

Dear Eunice Farmer,

When a pattern suggests a certain size button for your garment and the button you select is not quite the same size, how can you adjust for this in your construction? My pattern called for buttons "line-45," the buttons that looked best on my garment were "line-42." I'm waiting for you to tell me whether or not I could substitute the size. — Mrs. J. R.

Dear Mrs. J. R.:

Since there are many manufacturers of buttons, and many of these are importers, you will find a great variety of sizes available. Many of them are so close in size that the difference is negligible. One of our largest button companies has furnished me with a marvelous chart of buttons illustrations, both the actual size and the outline of the various sizes. These are available for your personal use if you send a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request for "Button Gauge" to Eunice Farmer in care of this newspaper.

Remember, when you choose a button the gauge is 40 lines equals one inch. Besides the width of the button, it is also important to measure your buttonhole according to the depth of the button. The thicker the button, the more width you will need for the buttonhole. Since most fabrics respond differently to buttonholes, it is always a good idea to make a sample buttonhole in the size you desire with the fabric of your garment. Then it is simple to know exactly what size button will fit.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Pants Skin-Tight

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I think the world has gone mad with fashions for men. It's bad enough that men are now sporting velvet and ruffles and crazy color combinations in shirts and ties. But how about those skin-tight pants, Abby? The pants are so tight that they're made without pockets.

Where is a man supposed to carry his wallet, keys, handkerchief and pocket comb?—Wondering.

DEAR WONDERING: In his purse, silly!

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are in our early 60s and have had a very happy marriage, but now my doctor tells me that I have an incurable disease and will soon be a helpless invalid, and I'll probably linger on for years as a "vegetable," no good to my husband, or anyone else.

My husband is healthy, handsome and virile, and I haven't had the heart to tell him the awful news that he is tied to a doomed wife who will bring him nothing but misery and anguish for the next few years.

I love my husband too much to ruin his life this way, and am seriously considering getting a divorce and setting him free to seek new happiness with someone who can be a real wife to him.

What should I do, Abby? I would also welcome suggestions from your readers—especially the men. Thank you, all.—I. M. Doomed."

DEAR I.M.: Ask your doctor to tell your husband, in your presence, what he has told you about your condition. Then don't try to second-guess your husband's reactions, or blueprint his future, however well-intentioned. You won't "ruin" your husband's life—you may enrich it. Because, after a long and happy marriage, he may want to put more into that marriage now than he ever has before.

Now, ask yourself this: "If your husband were dying, would you permit him to divorce you in order that you could seek happiness with another man?" I doubt it.

DEAR ABBY: Ten years ago, when we were married, we decided to have four children. Through the years we were blessed with three healthy sons, and on sharing in the happiness of dear friends who had adopted an infant, an idea grew in our minds.

Since it is true that so many babies are born out of wedlock, and the world population is increasing so rapidly, why should we bring still another child into the world when there are so many children who desperately need the love and care of a family—truly the right of all children?

We made an appointment with a licensed adoption agency. All we needed was a medical checkup, showing us to be physically fit, three character references and a letter stating our religion. (Here the adoptive parents must be the same religion as the baby's natural mother.)

We were interviewed both at home and at the agency and within two months we had a beautiful, healthy, alert, six-month-old daughter.

Please pass this on to others, Abby. I think "natural motherhood" is vastly overrated.—Happy Mother.

Confidential to "Frankly Frank": Keep your lip zipped. No one wants an honest opinion of a horse after he's already bought it.

Miserable Voyage For Astronauts

HOUSTON (AP) — Anxious for their safety, short of sleep, breathing stale air in a darkened cabin and more than 100,000 miles from home, the three Apollo 13 astronauts live like steerage passengers aboard a $95,000,000 spacecraft.

Life is "reasonably uncomfortable" for James Lovell, Fred Haise and John Swigert, a space official says.

They are living in one of the most complicated vehicles ever built.

But the explosion that crippled it also killed its comfort.

"Upstairs" to the astronauts is the command module. To move upstairs from the lunar lander, they drift through a connecting tunnel.

As they float weightlessly into the darkened command ship, they must grope to find their way. All lights have been turned off to save electricity. To see most of the time, they use a flashlight. Occasionallly, as the craft spins through space, sunlight flashes through a window.

BEDROOM IS DARK

The command ship Odyssey is no longer the heart of man's third moon landing attempt. Now it is only a bedroom. The astronauts sleep in it and spend some time shooting pictures out of the craft's windows.

Heartbeat of the combined craft now is the moon lander Aquarius.

Lights shine here, gauges move and it's here that voices from earth are heard.

Aquarius, designed for two men, is cramped and uncomfortable for three. There's no place to lie down to rest.

The trio gathered there during the second rocket firing Tuesday.

"I'm probably the only command module pilot who ever witnessed the lunar module engine burn sitting on the engine hatch in the moon lander," Swigert joked.

Air in the spacecraft quickly grows stale, but there's little the spacemen can do. Oxygen is limited. They can't freely replace it as they did before the emergency.

Instead, chemical canisters "scrub" the air of carbon dioxide and odors. When the canister is used up, it must be replaced. Soon, they will have to rig additional canisters just to keep the air breathable.

They are anxious for home, for safety and for the end of their ordeal.

"How would you like to spend a week on an aircraft carrier getting back to land?" ask Mission Control, referring to the post-splashdown plans.

"If I can get on an aircraft carrier, I don't care how long it takes," came the reply from Haise.

They must be careful with their drinking water.

SUGGESTS RATIONS

Lovell suggested at one point: "Maybe you can sort of think about rationing us. I mean, just to make sure that we've got enogugh to last us. I'd hate to run out of water on the last day."

Then he thinks of the spacecraft food, most of which must be reconstituted with water.

"The stuff that's good to eat now would be the candies and the sandwich spreads," he says. "The dehydrated stuff . . . it's going to be kinda difficult."

With the command module's power off, it's cold in the Apollo 13 "bedroom," making sleep all the harder to get.

Well-Known Pioneer Dies at 73

Mrs. Ethel Gertrude Ball, 73, mother of one of Victoria's best-known families, died Sunday in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Scientists Determining Ocean 'Slope'

VALPARAISO, Chile (CP) — The Canadian oceanographic vessel Hudson sailed southwestward Tuesday to begin surveys along the 150th line of longitude that will help space satellites survey the world's oceans later in this decade.

Put together, the ocean and space data will enable scientists to determine accurately for the first time the amount of "slope" there is to the sea.

Under the different circumstances, ocean surfaces tilt over a wide area and in what scientists are confident is a measurable degree.

The Hudson, which had a week's reprovision and rest period here, will make complicated measurements along the 150th west longitude for the next seven weeks, starting near the antarctic ice and sailing northward to just off Alaska.

These measurements will be used to frame an ocean equivalent of the landsman's mean sea level, dubbed an "equipotential surface".

MEASURE GRAVITY

Dr. Richard T. Haworth, who heads the Bedford Institute's resource survey group at Halifax, and five other scientists are measuring the earth's gravity at one-minute intervals to a high degree of accuracy along the 150th parallel.

Only with the aid of the Hudson's computers can the program be undertaken because of the massive amounts of data required to make each calculation.

When the United States puts up an oceanographic satellite, possibly by 1975, the Hudson's data should provide the world's first equipotential surface along a north-south line through most of the Pacific.

The satellite will collect data that will provide precise knowledge of the space vehicle's height above sea level as it moves over the Pacific. This then can be used to determine the ocean's tilt when coupled with the equipotential surface data along the 150th and other reference points in the Pacific.

FLASHING LIGHT LEADS TO UNDERWATER DROP

CHICAGO (UPI) — Somebody stole the bright red station wagon of 10th battalion fire chief Richard Josepka while he was at a fire. The car was found later in Lake Michigan off suburban Evanston. A security guard of Northwestern University spotted the vehicle's flashing red light in the water.

Sudden Pressure Rise Before Capsule Blast

By STUART AUERBACH

HOUSTON (WP) — "It's just as if a giant Thermos bottle broke."

That's the way flight director Glynn Lunney Tuesday described the sudden explosion in one of the cold-storage oxygen tanks that crippled the Apollo 13 spacecraft Monday night and forced its emergency return toward earth.

"Something really physical happened," said Lunney, tired after more than 12 straight hours in mission control at the Manned Spacecraft Centre here.

PHYSICAL IMPACT

"It appears that something in the cryogenic tanks gave way, causing a problem with the fuel cell. It was probably a physical impact of some kind."

Space officials here still don't know what caused the impact, but they have ruled out speculation that the spacecraft was hit by a meteorite.

The spacecraft's two tanks for cryogenic or super-cold oxygen supply the oxygen that combines with hydrogen for a high-heat chemical reaction in the fuel cells to provide electrical energy for the spacecraft.

They are about the size of basketballs and built like Thermos bottles, explained Clint Burton, the electrical, environmental and communications systems flight controller. They have a narrow vacuum space between two layers of thin but strong walls.

The tanks, manufactured by the Beech Aircraft Corp. of Wichita, Kan., are located in the service module bay 4, behind and below the spacecraft commander James Lovell's seat on the left hand side of the command module.

GAS, PARTICLES

The astronauts, Lunney said, spotted gas and particles vented from the service module through the No. 1 window, which is also on the left side.

Burton pinned the problem down to cryogenic oxygen tank No. 2, which he said had a sudden increase in pressure that dropped to zero within seconds, at the same time the astronauts reported "a loud bang."

His chart showed that at exactly 10:06 Monday night that tank registered a normal 930 pounds per square inch of pressure. Then, he said, "something caused it to go up, up, up."

Within a minute — by 10:07 — the pressure had shot up to 1,008 pounds per square inch. This is 6 pounds per square inch above the pressure at which some oxygen will leak out of a relief valve.

But small amounts of oxygen didn't vent out the relief valve, Burton said. Instead, he said, "within seconds it dropped to nothing" — 19 pounds per square inch.

"It had to be a rupture in one of the tanks," Lunney said.

Japan Hopes In UN Dashed

By SELIG S. HARRISON

TOKYO (WP) — United Nations Secretary-General U Thant threw cold water on Japanese hopes for a "semi-permanent" seat on the UN security council Tuesday, delcaring that proposals for revision of the UN charter "would not be realistic for a long time to come."

Japanese leaders have made a series of statements in recent weeks calling for a broad reorganization of the Security Council designed to dilute the power of the five present permanent members. Japan would get a seat without a veto as part of a proposed expansion of the council membership.

Asked by Japanese newsmen whether he saw a chance for Japanese Secuity Council membership within five years, Thant said that "while there may be merit in some proposals for revision of the UN charter, my personal view is that this will not be realistic for a long time to come. It is not a practical proposition."

IMPORTANT ROLE

While he is "aware of Japan's desire to play a more important role in the UN," Thant said, "the question that has been asked implies a possible revision of the charter, and we must obviously bear in mind that this would involve the endorsement of two thirds of the membership, including the five permanent members of the council."

Japanese representatives at the UN have made general references to the need for UN reorganization in past years but have avoided specific proposals in the face of a hostile reception from the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. now the issue is receiving increasing official emphasis as a new focus of Japanese efforts to win recognition as a major power.

Sheppard Died from Liver Failure

COLUMBUS, Ohio (UPI) — Franklin County coroner Robert Evans said today an official autopsy report showed Dr. Sam Sheppard died of natural causes brought on by liver failure.

"Dr. Sheppard died of natural causes brought on by pathological transformation of the liver, or fatty metamorphosis of the liver," Evans said.

Evans said there was no sign Sheppard had cancer or had taken large doses of drugs before his death April 6. Evans had delayed the official autopsy report pending results of chemical tests.

Sheppard was convicted of murdering his first wife, Marilyn, in their Bay Village, Ohio, home on the shore of Lake Erie July 4, 1954. He served 10 years in prison and then was acquitted at a second trial, ordered by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Sheppard was found dead in the home here of Mr. and Mrs. George Strickland, whose daughter, Colleen, 20, he had married last October, after being divorced by his German-born second wife, Ariane Tebbenjohans.

Woodward Widow Dies; Rites Set

VANCOUVER (CP) — Funeral services will be held here Thursday for Marion Louise May Woodward, widow of Percival Archibald Woodward, British Columbia merchant and philanthropist.

Mrs. Woodward, born in Indian Head, Sask., and married there in 1916, died in Vancouver Monday. She was 77.

Her husband, who died Aug. 27, 1968, was honorary vice-president of Woodward Stores (Vancouver) Ltd.

With his brother, the late former lieutenant-governor W. C. Woodward, he developed the pioneer business that started when their father, Charles Woodward, opened a store in Vancouver in 1892.

It was estimated that between 1955 and the time of his death P. A. Woodward donated more than $5,000,000 to various charities, mainly in large gifts to hospitals in British Colum

Independence Major Issue In Quebec Vote

QUEBEC (CP)—Robert Bourassa, leader of the Liberal party, and Rene Levesque, chief of the separatist Parti Quebecois, argued Tuesday the respective merits of federalism and independence for Quebec in campaigning for the April 29 Quebec general election.

Mr. Bourassa told an audience at Buckingham, 15 miles east of Ottawa, that Quebec benefits from Canada's federal system of government, while Mr. Levesque told supporters in Montreal that system no longer works for Quebec.

Elsewhere, Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand borrowed a phrase from President Nixon to explain why he believes the main battle in the election will be between his Union Nationale party and Mr. Bourassa's Liberals.

Mr. Bertrand told reporters at Ste. Anne des Monts on the Gaspe Peninsula that Quebec's "silent majority" will vote for the traditional parties and not the so-called third parties—the Parti Quebecois and Creditistes.

CITES REASONS

Mr. Bourassa gave three reasons why Quebec should not separate from Canada:

—A united Canada shields Quebec from the economic and political power of the United States.

—The 1,000,000 French-Canadians living in other provinces would lose their culture and language if Quebec withdrew from Confederation.

—The federal system provides important economic benefits for Quebec by redistributing the country's wealth through the federal government's taxation powers.

Mr. Bourassa said in reference to the Parti Quebecois that "radical options" cannot provide similar economic benefits.

He said the federal government poured about $900,000,000 into Quebec during the 1968-69 fiscal year and spent in the province 43 per cent of all the money allotted for alleviating regional economic disparities.

LEVELS CHANGES

Later, in Fort Coulogne, 57 miles northwest of Ottawa, Mr. Bourassa accused several Union Nationale government members of being "crypto-separatists".

He said men such as Education Minister Jean-Guy Cardinal, Finance Minister Mario Beaulieu, Intergovernmental Affairs Minister Marcel Masse and Labor Minister Jean Cournoyer refuse to say whether they are separatists or federalists.

Mr. Levesque said he is not opposed to the federal system as such but added: "I am against any system that doesn't work for Quebec."

He told about 700 persons who crowded into a north-end Montreal school auditorium that "lives are being wasted in the present system, and it's no laughing matter.

"How can you build anything when we have the hammer here and the nails are buried in Ottawa?

NOTES CROWDS

Mr. Levesque also noted during his speech the "fantastic" reception his party has received at rallies during his weekend tour of eastern Quebec ridings, but Mr. Bertrand was skeptical about whether the phenomenon would make itself felt election day.

"The Parti Quebecois started the campaign on the crest of a popularity wave and it can't do anything but go down from now on," he said.

The same was true of the Creditistes, who enjoy strong support in some rural areas of the province, Mr. Bourassa said.

Asked to comment on the large turnouts so far for Parti Quebecois rallies, the premier said:

"This is quite normal. There's a curiosity element involved, and there is also a certain fanaticism. In the third parties, people keep together and demonstrate more.

However, the "silent majority" of Quebec voters would remain loyal to the Union Nationale and Liberal parties.

PROVENCHER
. . . dream realized

Separatist Cleric Unique Candidate

MONTREAL (CP) — Before Premier Jean-Jacques Bertrand called a Quebec general election for April 29, Gerard Provencher was Brother Gilbert of the Sacred Heart Order.

Now he is Mr. Gerard Provencher, completely secularized and free of all Roman Catholic vows until his political life is over.

He is a candidate for the separatist Parti Quebecois in the Liberal-held riding of Chateauguay, near Montreal.

"I thought I would die before I saw a nationalist party in Quebec politics," Mr. Provencher said in an interview. "Now my dream is realized and I will take all roads to achieve my objectives."

Mr. Provencher is the only member of a religious order to be a candidate in the current provincial election.

Monseigneur Francois Xavier LaBelle, appointed deputy minister of agriculture and colonization under the cabinet of Honore Mercier, premier from 1887 to 1891, was the only member of a Quebec religious order ever to be successful in provincial politics.

CRUSADE NOT NEW

Mr. Provencher, who calls himself a phenomenon in the history of Quebec, is not new to the idea of Quebec aux Quebecois.

He has been running his own personal crusade since he was a 17-year-old brother, 49 years ago.

He started writing for journals, "analysing what I saw, noticing grave injustices against the French on the part of the English."

Mr. Provencher recounted some of the stories which enraged him and made him the staunch nationalist he is today.

"I was in a restaurant where the waitress couldn't speak French. I demanded a French girl and proceeded to speak English to her to give her a lesson in politeness.

"Then there was the naming of the Queen Elizabeth Hotel back in the mid-50s. I was in the centre of a group who wanted it called Chateau Maisonneuve and our group collected 36,000 signatures asking for the French name.

"Of course, nothing was done so we burnt an effigy of the president of the Canadian National which was built in a school in suburban Verdun when I was prefect of studies."

Duncan to Tackle Slumlord Abuses

DUNCAN — Slum lords — absentee owners who live in expensive homes in the best areas of the municipality or city and rent substandard shacks for as much as the traffic will bear — came under fire in city council by Ald. Allan Kerr.

Council voted unanimously to empower Mayor Jim Quaife and his city administrative staff to check the buildings and condemn them if they are found to be uninhabitable.

Kerr said unscrupulous absentee landlords who rent substandard hovels to poor people were also attracting "spongers" to the city from Campbell River, Oliver, Kamloops and other centres.

Some slumlords live in $30,000 to $40,000 homes in North Cowichan and charge comparitively high rent for their rundown places in the city, Kerr said.

He said the type of person the slum houses attracted lacked even the hippies philosophy but even the hippies philosophy.

More Ties to Past Laid Down by Museum

By ED GOULD

NORTH COWICHAN — They've been workin' on the railroad — Cowichan Valley Railway, that is.

During the last few weeks, general manager Gerry Wellburn and a small crew have been adding a half-mile extension to the one-mile of narrow-gauge steel the Cowichan Valley Forest Museum already has.

With sidings, the museum will own nearly two miles of track for its oldtime rolling stock.

Working side by side with Wellburn — the retired lumberman who conceived the idea of the museum and its driving force for more than 20 years — is young Paul Henry.

FROM YUKON

Henry, 20 has just arrived here from the Yukon where he was a gandy dancer (an oldtime railroad term for trackmen who tamped the earth between the ties with a sharp spade) for White Pass & Yukon Route — the only other three-foot gauge railroad in North America.

Also assisting Wellburn is Pat Phillips, a graduate forester from University of British Columbia who is superintendent in charge of the museum, and Fred Bell, locomotive engineer and maintenance man.

BOYHOOD DREAM

Bell realized a boyhood dream the day he started work here, the day he took control of a steam-belching locomotive and pulled his first freight cars and coaches around the curving tracks along the banks of Somenos Lake.

For the passengers, it meant transportation back to the Golden Era of Steam. For Bell it was even more nostalgic. He told how in 1944 he used to sit in an old locomotive in a scrapyard belonging to S.S. Mogroffin Co., railway contractors in North Vancouver.

Whenever Bell could get away from the caretaker who wanted him to run his golden retrievers, he would sneak off to daydream over the controls of "old 25" — never visualizing that he would some day operate the same old locie after it was restored to good condition and donated to the museum.

PART OF STORY

Of course, steam locomotives and other old and not-so-old steam, internal combustion and diesel equipment is only part of the story of Cowichan Valley Forest Museum. (There's a move under way to change the name to British Columbia Forest Museum.)

Its original dedication was to the forest industry of British Columbia. As leading industry in the province — B.C. produces 70 per cent of the country's output — it is only fitting such a permanent memorial be established.

However, if the term "museum" conjures up a vision of inanimate objects stored in a dusty, decaying atmosphere, forget it! There's nothing dead or inanimate. Displays of equipment are mostly outdoors where adults and children can touch and smell and crawl all over them to get the literal "feel" of the past.

TREE FARM

To further enhance its image of living history, British Columbia Forest Nursery at Koksilah has begun a nursery on the museum property, recently expanded from 25 to 40 acres.

"People will soon be able to see how a tree farm actually operates in this capsule forest," Phillips said.

Practical, as well as instructive and ornamental, the forest will become part of the Koksilah complex with more than 200,000 trees a year being started here and then being transplanted elsewhere in reforestation projects.

The Cowichan Valley Forest Museum opens to the public on May 16.

Indian Band Tries Again To Get Shop Centre Funds

DUNCAN — The Cowichan Indian Band Council will apply for a $2.5 million revolving fund loan to get construction of Khowetzun Centre started this year, Chief Dennis Alphonse said Tuesday.

Alphonse, who is also band manager, said the Indian-owned and operated shopping centre, will contain a supermarket, bank, department store and 10 or 12 smaller stores.

Financing has been delayed for more than a year because of cutbacks in government spending, the high cost of loans and shortage of money.

The centre is planned for a site south of Underwood Street between the E & N Railway tracks and Allenby Road, and will mean removal of The Mound, Duncan's only treed area.

The band council also agreed to purchase about $1,500 worth of books, mainly on Indian culture, which will become part of a library in a proposed Indian social centre.

Speaking Contest Saturday

DUNCAN — Toastmasters and their wives from all over the Island will compete in the Vancouver Island division speech contest at the Commercial Hotel Saturday.

Don Shaw of Victoria Beaver Toastmasters will compete against Al Hussey of Cowichan Toastmasters of Duncan and Pat Barron of Nanaimo 738 Club.

The winner will represent the Island at the all-British Columbia speech contest in Victoria May 9.

Mayor Jim Quaife will greet delegates at a dinner at 7:15 p.m. Trophies and certificates will be presented to contestants by Ron Southern of Cowichan Toastmasters, lieutenant-governor for the Island, and by David Brown of Victoria, district governor.

Mass Murder in Cambodia

MASSACRE VICTIMS in Cambodia float down the Mekong River in what is believed to be the largest mass killing of Vietnamese citizens yet revealed in Cambodia. Government leaders, who recently deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk, have been whipping up a campaign against the 600,000 Vietnamese civilians who live in Cambodia as well as against N. Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in the country. (AP Wirephoto).

Bodies Floating In River

NEAK LEUNG (AP) —The bodies of hundreds of Vietnamese floated down the Meking River in southeast Cambodia today, many with their hands tied behind them. It appeared to be the biggest mass killing yet revealed in Cambodia.

A police official at the Neak Leung ferry crossing 36 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, the Cambodian capital, said he had counted 400 bodies this morning.

But still they come, and more could be seen for a mile up the river, until it disappeared around a bend.

The stench was overpowering, and passengers on the ferry gagged as the boat moved through the bodies.

Some women were among the slain. Most were men clad only in black shorts. One group of eight bodies, including one woman, floated by tied together.

Cambodians along the bank including the police said they had no idea where the bodies came from.

WHIP UP HATE

The government leaders who deposed Prince Nordom Sihanouk have been whipping up an anti-Vietnamese campaign directed not only at the thousands of Viet Cong and North Vietnamese troops who operate back and forth across the border with South Vietnam but at the 600,000 Vietnamese who live in Cambodia.

The Khmer people of Cambodia and the Annamites of Vietnam have been traditional enemies for centuries, and government planes dropped leaflets in Phnom Penh Saturday reminding the people of a historic massacre when "the Khmers once rose up and killed all Annamites on Cambodian territory in one night."

At least 73 Vietnamese who had been rounded up in the town of Prasaut for security checks were killed there last Friday, and according to available evidence Cambodian troops were the killers.

Saturday, at least seven more Vietnamese were shot by Cambodian troops just south of Kamoibg Trabek, near the border west of Prasaut.

'CAN'T ACCEPT' ARCTIC STAND

WASHINGTON (CP) — The state department said today the United States "can neither accept nor acquiesce in" the recent Canadian assertion of Arctic and territorial-sea jurisdiction.

In particular, the statement said, "we are concerned that this action by Canada, if not opposed by us, would be taken as precedent in other parts of the world, for other unilateral infringements of the freedom of the seas."

The statement was issued by State Secretary William Rogers.

"For the reasons indicated earlier, the United States cannot accept the unilateral jurisdictional assertion and we have urged the Canadian government to defer making them effective while co-operating in efforts promptly to reach internationally-agreed solutions."

In Ottawa, informed sources were quoted Tuesday as saying Canada would reject, firmly but politely, the U.S. complaint.

Prime Minister Trudeau and U.S. President Nixon had one telephone conversation about three weeks ago concerning Canada's jurisdictional claims.

Today in the Commons, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp denied reports that the United States has threatened economic sanctions against Canada in the diplomatic note.

Sharp said he favors making the note public to dispel these rumors from U.S. sources.

NERVE GAS EXPERTS COMING FROM OTTAWA

By The Canadian Press

OTTAWA — The Canadian government will send nerve gas experts to the West Coast to be on hand for the U.S. shipment of nerve gas through the Juan de Fuca Strait, it was announced today.

Defence Minister Leo Cadieux said the experts would be dispatched as soon as word comes on the date of the shipment.

Earlier, External Affairs Minister Mitchell Sharp told the Commons that Canada has expressed "grave concern" to the U.S. about the trip.

Crippled Apollo 13 Weaving Off Course

Times News Services

HOUSTON — The crippled Apollo 13 spacecraft, limping back to earth today with its three weary astronauts, was slightly off course and pitching erratically, while Mission Control sought to allay fears that the service module is disintegrating.

James A. Lovell, Fred W. Haise and John L. Swigert were hoarding their vital oxygen, water and power supplies and they have no margins left for error, but space administration officials still believe they will be able to land safely in the Pacific early Friday.

Fears that the service module may now be breaking up began Tuesday night when Haise, on watch while the other two slept, spotted a four-inch square piece of metal floating by the module. He also reported a stream of vapor exhausting from somewhere on the service module.

MAIN ENGINE

This led to speculation at the Manned Spacecraft Centre here that the module, which contains the main engine and other key equipment, is breaking up.

But an agency spokesman said: "Even if it was, it wouldn't matter. It's not important anyway . . . they could jettison the service module now."

However, the Apollo 13, rocked by a mystery explosion Monday night which aborted man's third moon mission, was pitching and yawing when Lovell relieved Haise on watch this morning.

The yawing and pitching was believed responsible for throwing the spacecraft off course, necessitating a mid-course correction tonight or early Thursday.

MISS THE EARTH

If for any reason the firing, which will be done with the lunar landing module engines, is not successful the spaceship will miss the earth by 104 miles and probably go into a remote orbit from which there would be no escape for the three men.

Their meagre supply of oxygen would be exhausted in a matter of a few days, long before they would approach earth again closely enough for a landing attempt.

There is little reason to believe the lunar module's big descent engine will not function properly, however; it has already fired twice, making vital course corrections, since Monday night when an oxygen tank ruptured, cutting electrical power and rendering the command module virtually useless.

Since then the three men have been reduced to almost total dependence on the power attached lunar landing craft.

Flight Director Eugene Kranz said today the lunar module is in excellent shape and "I think it's fully capable of getting the crew back. I feel we are much better off than we were last night as far as consumables and everything is concerned."

The astronauts will ride the command ship through the atmosphere to a planned splashdown near Samoa in the Pacific at 10:04 a.m. PST Friday, some 46 minutes later than earlier estimated by the space agency.

Because of the possibility that tropical storm Helen, now about 500 miles away, might be in the recovery area, Mission Control told the astronauts it might delay a final course correction until Thursday afternoon.

The fragile lunar lander, now manned by Haise and Lovell, will be jettisoned, along with the service module, shortly before the spacecraft re-enters the earth's atmosphere for splashdown.

Haise and Lovell will rejoin Swigert in the command capsule Odyssey shortly before the jettisoning procedure.

Wines Hit Hard In Price Hikes

By BRUCE YEMEN

While one major proposal of the Morrow Liquor Commission was going into effect today, another was going down the drain.

The provincial cabinet approved price increases on 65 items sold by the Liquor Control Board in direct opposition to the royal commission's recommendation for a two-year price freeze on alcoholic beverages.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said the increases and decreases reflect changes in the price paid by the Liquor Board for the products, and there is no change in the mark-up by the board.

"You'll find our mark-up is the lowest in all Canada," he said.

The cabinet order was released about the same time as 19-year-olds were being allowed to drink alcoholic beverages for the first time in B.C. — as was recommended by the commission.

The price increases generally were in the 10- to 25-cent range but a few were more startling.

Most of the increases hit imported wines, brandies and other already expensive lines.

The Morrow Commission's complaints about "gouging" of B.C. wine drinkers by the LCB were apparently unheeded by the cabinet which hiked the prices of 28 French wines.

EIGHT DECREASED

There were total of eight price decreases for a brand of Canadian wines (Andre's), but nine were also increased.

One of the few Canadian liquor brands to rise was Seagran's Crown Royal which jumped from $7.60 to $7.90 for a 26-ounce bottle.

ADD 38 ITEMS

The cabinet order today also added 38 items to the list of products sold by the LCB, including 17 Canadian wines, seven Canadian liqueurs, five Canadian gins and one imported Scotch.

It also makes available for the first time, 12-ounce bottles of Canadian vodka.

One of the largest increases on French wines was for Chablis white which jumps from $2.90 to $4.60.

Beaune Red goes from $3.80 to $4.70, Beaujolais Red from $2.75 to $3, Pommard Red from $6.15 to $7.30, St. Julien from $3.30 to $3.45 and Medoc from $2.25 to $2.35.

B-B Body Backs Third Language

OTTAWA (CP) — The royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism recommends that languages besides English and French be taught in Canadian elementary schools where sufficient demand exists.

The commission says in its fourth report, tabled today in the Commons by Prime Minister Trudeau, that this might mean eliminating some parts of the basic curriculum "and would therefore entail a deliberate choice by parents and school authorities."

It takes as its main premise that "public education systems should provide courses that will assist the various cultural groups in the maintenance of their languages and cultures."

It suggests that languages other than English or French also be used in the schools as the languages of instruction in some cultural subjects.

The commission's report says the definition of what constitutes sufficient demand for the teaching of languages other than English and French should be left to provincial education authorities.

Though education comes under provincial jurisdiction, the commission's report is to the federal government, which appointed it in 1963.

Trudeau said recently that the commission finished its work March 31 but that some of its reports remain to be edited and printed. The fourth report is entitled The Cultural Contribution of the Other Ethnic Groups.

The report is based on 1961 census figures now nearly a decade out of date. The next census will be taken in 1971.

The commission says more advanced instruction and a wider range of choice in languages other than English and French and related cultural subjects should be provided in public high schools where demand is sufficient.

It says there are at least 60 languages of significant groups in Canada, though the main ones, other than French and English, are German, Italian, Ukrainian and Dutch.

The report emphasizes that the learning of third languages in school should not be carried on at the expense of public support for learning the second official language, French or English.

Lack of Funds Major Concern For Uvic

The biggest problem faced by the University of Victoria is not campus unrest or friction with the community. It's a lack of money.

Uvic President Bruce Partridge, speaking to a Kiwanis luncheon Tuesday, blamed insufficient funds for the fact that there will be few, if any, new programs offered by the university in the near future. He said the university is operating on a tight budget and "we can only spend our dollars once."

"We cannot be all things to all men," he said, referring to proposals that a school of nursing, a school of law and a medical school be established.

It would be useless to add new programs with insufficient operating funds. Not only would the new programs have difficulty meeting expenses but current programs would also suffer.

THREE REASONS

Partridge said operating costs of Canadian universities generally are rising at a staggering rate and cited three main reasons: rising salaries, increased enrolment and expensive equipment.

"Coupling these three effects results in phenomenal cost increases."

LEADERS APPEALING FOR MILITARY AID

By MURREY MARDER

WASHINGTON (WP) — Cambodian Premier Lon Nol issued a wholesale appeal Tuesday for military aid to repel what he called North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attempts to "conquer" his nation.

The appeal climaxes progressive hints by the new premier that outside aid would be requested if the situation deteriorated. Now, he said, "the gravity of the present situation" requires it.

The intruding forces, he said, "have systematically escalated their aggression" from "secret infiltration" to "open attacks, and stand-up battles with our defence units."

Attempts to solve the problem through negotiations have been spurned by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong, he said. As a result, Cambodia "deems it necessary to accept, from this moment on, all unconditional foreign aid from all sources for national safety."

Death Still Follows Their Every Movement

By VICTOR COHN
The Washington Post

Between now and splashdown, the Apollo 13 astronauts still must accomplish several crucial tasks, using a disabled command craft and a sort of jury-rigged lander.

These tasks are the bare minimum for safe return.

They must first follow a true and correct trajectory toward the slot in the earth's atmosphere which they must enter Friday for landing. This could mean one or more firings of the lunar module descent engine to adjust the course.

In the past these have always gone well. But now there are special problems.

The main guidance decisions are made on the ground from information fed into computers by tracking antennas. But the guidance system on the spacecraft, fed ground directions, must also work.

At Massachusetts Institute of Technology Tuesday night — at the celebrated instrumentation laboratory — a 30-man emergency team worked through the night studying a stressed Apollo 13 guidance system and working out new trajectories.

At the end of the night, Ralph Ragan, deputy lab chief, expressed some concern. The command ship's power shortage may cause the guidance system temperature to drop near zero. Its normal operating range is around 140 degrees. Any deviation could cause error.

This means another must. Mission trackers must watch for any errors, then order further course changes if necessary.

FEAR SECOND BLAST

Early Friday at latest, the crew must leave the lunar module and reactivate the electric power in the disabled command module. When they are ready to jettison the life-saving LM, they must turn on the command module's remaining oxygen supply.

This means turning on the same sort of systems where something exploded Tuesday night, though they had always worked adequately before.

At about 6 a.m. PST Friday the crewmen will have their last chance to readjust course, if necessary, for safe re-entry into the earth's atmosphere.

As late as possible, perhaps just an hour before re-entry — meaning about 8 a.m. Friday — the crew will jettison the LM and their attached service module so they can present their command modul's blunt heat shield to the atmosphere. Jettisoning the service module is standard procedure. They cannot retain the LM, either — it, too, lacks a heat shield and will soon burn up in the atmosphere.

NARROW SLOT

At about 9:04 a.m. Friday, the command ship should hit the atmosphere. It must re-enter a narrow slot of space — at an angle between 5.4 and 7.4 degrees.

Too steep an entry and the craft will overheat and burn despite its heat shield; too shallow and it will skip back into space like a stone.

Even at a perfect re-entry angle, the heat shield must hold up. It is designed to take 6,000 degrees.

During the brief re-entry the crew must depend for electric power on three entry and post-landing batteries that you could pack in a suitcase. They will be the only power source for life support systems, communications and a guidance computer during re-entry.

SHORT OF POWER

Normally, if a problem develops before the service module is jettisoned, the batteries can be recharged with the fuel cells — now dead. Experts at Houston estimate that the batteries still retain enough energy to furnish the electricity needed, but don't have enough left over to power spacecraft radios for 72 hours. That could become critical if the ship came down in a remote area where no ships are waiting.

The spacecraft must land in water. It should do this at 9:18 a.m. Friday. The landing system is designed for ocean return.

Seventy-two-hour radio capability or not, finally, Apollo 13 must land where it can be found quickly. This is necessary for a surely safe return.

Talks Resume

VANCOUVER (CP)—Negotiations have resumed between the locked out bricklayers' union and the Construction Labor Relations Association, CLRA president C. G. Connaghan said today.

The bricklayers are one of seven unions locked out by the employers' group as a wage dispute threatens to shut down most of the province's $200,000,000 construction industry.
(See Page 53.)

Connaghan said talks are scheduled to resume Thursday with the carpenters and possibly other unions.

Nixon Picks Northerner

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — Judge Harry A. Blackmun, a Minnesota moderate who is President Nixon's third choice to fill the long-vacant U.S. Supreme Court seat of Justice Abe Fortas, appeared assured today of support from both liberals and conservatives in the Senate.

Indications were that the coalition of liberal Democrats and moderate Republicans who teamed to defeat Judges Clement Haynsworth and G. Harrold Carswell would not pick another fight with the White House.

The 61-year-old Blackmun, from Rochester, Minn., was promised a quick hearing by the Senate judiciary committee.

Some key liberals, including former vice-president Hubert H. Humphrey, already have given him their backing. And the Senate Republican whip, Robert Griffin of Michigan, called him an excellent choice.

The most extensive effort in third languages should be made in elementary schools: "Children need a firm grasp of their mother tongue before leaving elementary school if they are to retain it in later years."

"There is the need to preserve the languages and cultures of new immigrants while also integrating them into Canadian society," the report says at another point.

To this end, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission should remove restrictions on private broadcasting in languages other than English and French and the CBC should "recognize the place of languages other than English and French in Canadian life."

The commission recommends that provinces which have not yet done so enact fair employment and accommodation practices and appoint full-time administrators of their human rights legislation.

It repeats a recommendation of other volumes that the same conditions for citzenship, the right to vote and to stand for election for public office be accorded to all immigrants.

It also urges that special instruction in English or French be provided for children who enter school with inadequate knowledge of the language and that Ottawa help the provinces to meet the costs.

Stretched Ferry Ready April 23

The public will have a chance to inspect the new stretched Queen of Victoria ferry for a limited time April 23, before a special guest cruise off the Victoria waterfront.

Victoria Chamber of Commerce is taking the opportunity to mark two anniversaries of the B.C. ferry system by organizing some of its members for a 1¾-hour cruise with Premier Bennett and guests of the government, holding a reception after the cruise and honoring Bennett at a dinner in the Empress.

This is the 10th anniversary of ferry operations — government management started Jan. 1, 1960 and the first B.C. ferry went into service June 15, 1960.

HOTEL RECEPTION

The Queen of Victoria will land at Black Ball Transport dock at 1:30 p.m. following regular departure of Mv Coho and will be open to the public until 3:15.

Chamber members and special guests will go aboard for the cruise, returning to the Black Ball dock about 5 p.m.

Six Australian wines, seven miscellaneous ones including the French Dubonnet and two Canadian rums also increased in price.

The Liquor Board decision was dated April 10 and was approved by the cabinet this week.

The cabinet also set a salary of $22,000 for the current year for acting Liquor Board chairman William Bruce.

The Numbers Game with Phosphates in detergents

A PUBLIC INFORMATION STATEMENT BY AMWAY OF CANADA, LTD.

Recently it has become popular to compile and circulate lists purporting to show the percentage of phosphate in detergents and allied cleaning products. The apparent purpose of these lists is to encourage the reader to use low phosphate content products in the interest of cleaner lake and stream water.

While the intent of this activity is laudable, the lists we have seen are so full of errors and omissions we believe they are best ignored. Here is why we make this statement:

First: Amway makes 21 laundry and general cleaning products. Eleven contain no phosphate, 2 less than 2%, and the other 8 have varying amounts according to the purpose they are intended to serve. Yet one widely published list shows only ONE listing of Amway — using simply the trademark "Amway" with no designation of the type of product and showing "73.5% phosphate." To publish a list simply showing a company name with a percentage seems to us about as inaccurate as to publish the name "General Motors — 400 h.p." in a list of auto horsepower ratings.

Second: Another list compares Amway's enzyme pre-soak product (TriZyme) with a group of heavy duty and light duty detergents. This is like comparing apples with bananas. Products, if to be meaningfully compared on the basis of phosphate content, should be carefully classified as to intended use. An enzyme pre-soak should be compared with other enzyme pre-soaks, a heavy duty detergent with other heavy duty detergents, a dishwashing detergent with other dishwashing detergents, etc.

Third: No mention of the amount of the product one would expect to use is made in most of the lists. A low phosphate detergent used in lavish quantities in order to get clothes clean may actually put considerably more phosphate in the water than a high phosphate product that need only be used sparingly because of its high cleaning power. A low phosphate product used frequently might put much more phosphate into the water than a higher phosphate product used only occasionally.

Fourth: One list recognized the fallacy of comparing products merely on a percentage basis, and set about to correct the error by publishing a comparison based on grams of phosphate used per wash cycle and parts per million in the effluent. Unfortunately the compiler of this list flunked his arithmetic. Grams per wash were listed as Amway S-A-8: 39.9, and included in the list were six others listed as 18.1, 20.0, 23.5, 24.1, 26.1, and 27.1 grams per wash cycle respectively. Our laboratory carefully re-checked the work and found the grams per cycle comparison is actually Amway S-A-8: 36.8, and the six others mentioned above are 38.4 instead of 18.1; 34.7 instead of 20.0; 51 instead of 23.5; 44.1 instead of 24.1; 34.2 instead of 26.1; and 37.4 instead of 27.1. In addition, the use amount quoted for Amway S-A-8 is almost double what many users actually put in their machine, so for many users the grams per wash load of Amway S-A-8 would be closer to 20 for actual use dilutions.

A Better Guide. We suggest a good general rule to follow regarding phosphate content in cleaning products and detergents is that with present day brands, most products intended for the same use contain relatively similar percentages of phosphate by weight. Classifications are as follows:

Classification	Phosphate Content expressed as % of PO_4
Heavy duty laundry powders (Amway S-A-8 Plus — 34.8% Amway S-A-8 Special — 10%)	30 — 45%
Light duty laundry powders	15 — 30%
Liquid hand dishwashing detergents (Amway Dish Drops – 0%; Amway L.O.C. Suds – 0%)	less than 1%
Machine dishwasher detergents (Amway Automatic Dishwashing Compound — 33.3%)	30 — 45%
Liquid hand laundry products (Amway L.O.C. Regular — 0%; Amway Germicidal — 0%)	0 — 10%
Liquid all purpose cleaners (Amway Zoom — 1.4%; Amway Industroclean — 1.3%; Amway Car Wash — 0%)	0 — 7%
Enzyme pre-soaks (Amway Tri-Zyme — 54.2%	about 50%
Water softening powders (Amway Water Softening Compound — 83.8%)	about 80%

But note this: The above percentages reflect phosphate content expressed as percent of PO_4. The phosphate compound used in these products when so expressed is only about 33% phosphorous, the element all the talk is about. Therefore, total phosphorous content of the products is about one-third that shown above.

What You Can Do about it. We suggest that if you have a concern about phosphate getting into streams and lakes the following would be a common sense approach:

1. Work with your local governments to encourage all municipalities in your area to build 3-stage sewage disposal systems as soon as possible. Hundreds of industrial and household chemicals and pollutants from human wastes are going into streams now because of inadequate sewage treatment facilities. The time has come to build facilities to clean up all of our sewage water and control the total problem. It is estimated removal of phosphate and certain other chemicals from effluent water of a 3-stage disposal system can be accomplished for an operating cost of less than $3. per person per year. This is a broader and more effective solution to the problem than reformulating detergents and other household products, because at least half of the phosphate in sewage comes from human wastes, and reformulated detergents won't change that. Also, reformulation of cleaning products with phosphate substitutes that totally eliminate the phosphate, even if technically and economically feasible (which it presently is not) might result in only substituting other ingredients with other problems when the effluent reaches streams.

2. Since phosphate content products are used principally in the laundry, it may be possible to dispose of your washing machine water in another way than through the public drain. You may be accomplishing this already, since correctly built septic tanks probably introduce no phosphate into public waters.

3. If you are connected to a city sewer system which does not have complete disposal facilities, and phosphate nutrients in streams are considered a serious problem in your community, you can use a general purpose non-phosphate liquid detergent to do your laundry such as Amway's unique "L.O.C." You must be prepared for a lower level of dirt and soil removal from clothes, however, and you may have to resort to some of the laundering techniques of bygone years such as overnight soaking and boiling.

4. Amway offers a full line of cleaning products carefully formulated for specific purposes. Amway's high performance products used according to directions will produce good results even when used sparingly. When nothing but phosphate containing products will do the job, Amway's products of that type can be relied upon to do the work most economically and with no need to use excessive quantities.

5. Amway has small quantities of a heavy duty low phosphate laundry detergent available for special situations (see description below).

What Is Amway Doing about Pollution? Amway is deeply concerned, like any good citizen. Here is Amway's "clean water" program:

1. Even though there is a difference of scientific opinion as to whether the elimination of phosphates in detergents will have a significant effect on eutrophication of lakes, Amway chemists are actively evaluating phosphate substitutes for detergent use that will be economic, efficient, and not cause unforeseen worse problems than phosphate is alleged to cause now.

2. Amway is now introducing to the Canadian market a heavy duty laundry detergent with less than 10% phosphate. The product contains a phosphate substitute which is expensive and will be in extremely short supply for a long time to come. Therefore Amway distributors have been instructed to offer this product only to customers whose laundries are connected to public sewers without phosphate disposal systems, and where phosphate nutrients are considered to be causing an immediate problem. The product presently costs more to use, but gives results equivalent to good quality higher phosphate products. We believe it is the best low phosphate product that can be made immediately, though future research will undoubtedly make possible equally fine products at lower cost.

3. Amway has long been in the forefront in the field of promoting clean water. Amway marketed detergent products with biodegradable surfactants as much as five years before most of the industry converted. Surfactants are an indispensable ingredient in any detergent product, and present day surfactants used in all detergent products are of a type that can be consumed by bacteria in sewage plants and streams and converted to harmless materials.

4. Some confusion exists in understanding the new terminology regarding pollution matters. For instance, biodegradability of surfactants is technically an entirely different matter than acceleration of plant growth in lake waters by excess nutrients such as phosphate. Many new terms have only recently come into popular use, such as eutrophication, ecology, thermal pollution, oxygen depletion and algal nutrients. This necessitates more exact definition of formerly used terms, such as biodegradability of surfactants. Amway will conduct an educational program to provide its distributors and customers with better understanding of these terms. Future label and advertising copy will include the new terminology with today's connotations.

5. Amway suggests citizens keep these matters in proper perspective. Cleaning up the pollution of our environment — water, air and land — is a great challenge for all of us in this decade. It is a serious problem, with world-wide ramifications. To arouse public interest and support, predictions of impending disaster are being widely published. Facts are not always being separated from opinions. Industry and government become easy scapegoats. But this must not lead to hastily contrived programs and actions that may actually worsen the situation by using funds that could be better spent on well planned long term solutions. We all want a clean environment. We will achieve it best by well reasoned and well planned actions based upon scientifically proven facts, not by hasty actions based on emotional speculation.

The Weather and You

By CARL RIBLET, JR.

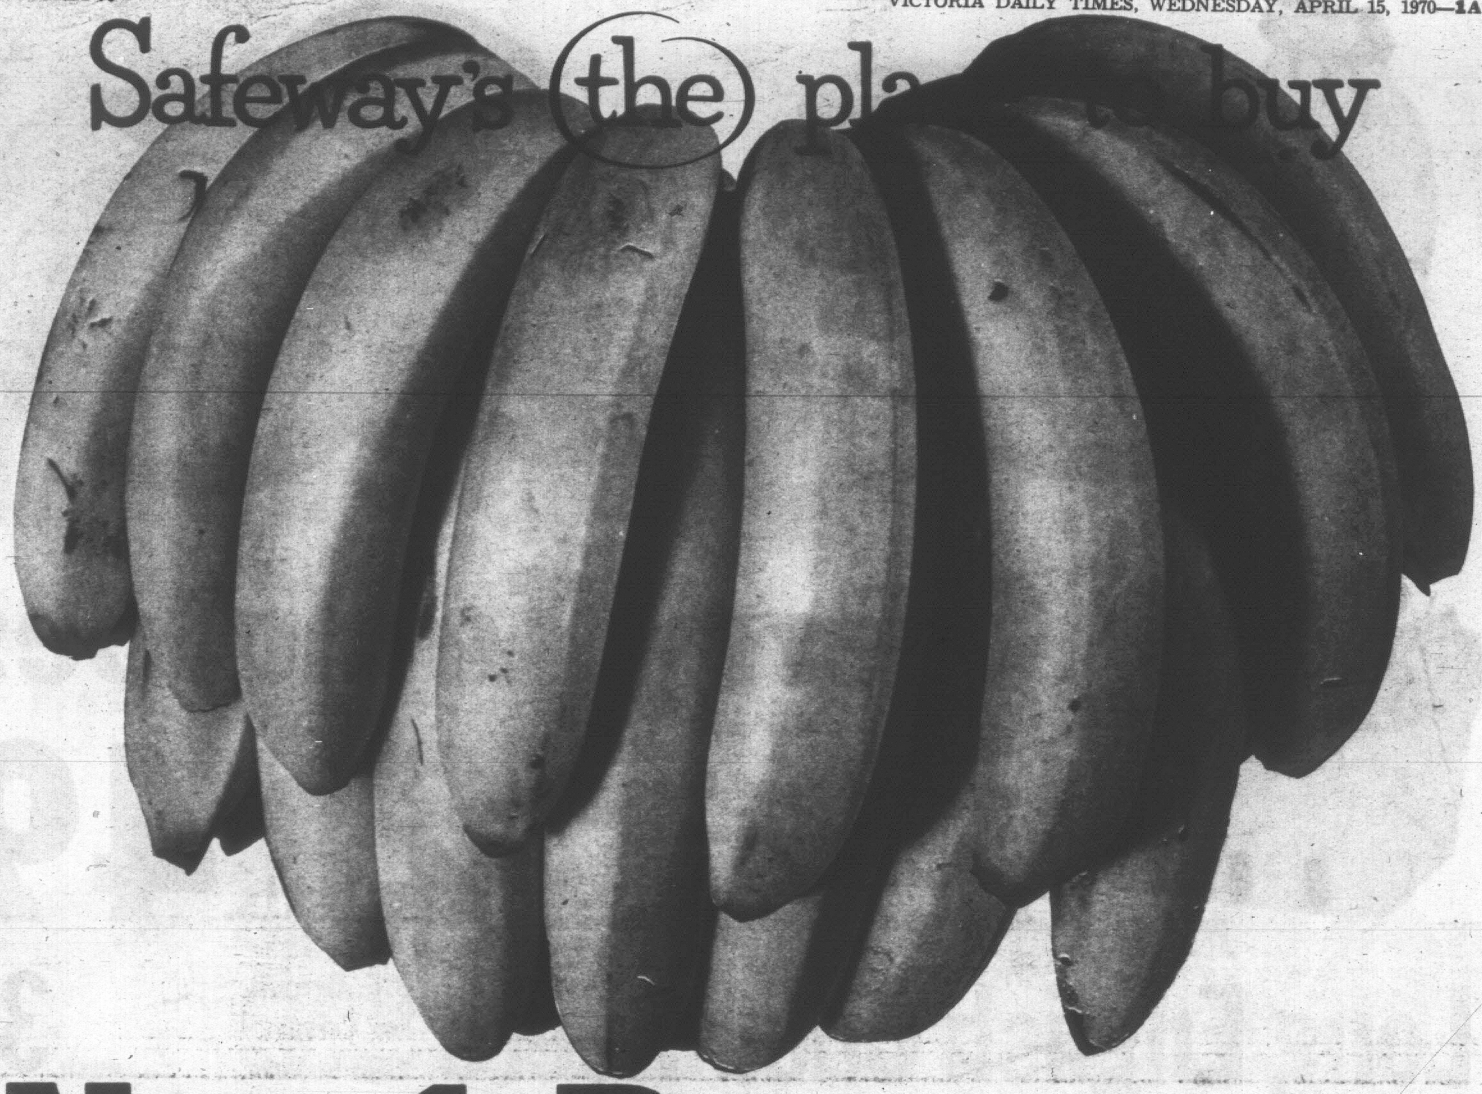

Noses bleed more often in the summertime, and day-after-day dry weather is to blame, especially in areas of the Southwest.

The inside of your nose is a superbly constructed organ for humidifying the air you breathe before it gets to the lungs. This wonderful air-conditioning machine contains an intricate system of blood vessels that course very near to the surface of the inside of the nose. As the dry air passes over the lining of the nose, it pickes up water from the area. It thereby becomes humidified. The water is supplied to the lining membrane by the underlying blood vessels.

When the summer days are particularly dry, the lining membrane of your nose becomes drier than usual and thinner. The blood vessels are thereby exposed more directly to the air and then they tend to break and bleed. A sure cure is a humid day.

Help Our Wheat Farmers

As you know, our wheat farmers face a critical situation. Countries normally importing our wheat to supplement their crops now have surpluses of their own. Because a crisis in our wheat economy is of national concern, we must take action to render what aid we can. Serve your family a large variety of wheat products often. You'll be serving good eating and good nutrition.
